Care of Milch Cows.

It must be apparent to every thinking person that the highest animal perfection will not insure an abundant and rich supply of milk, unless proper care is taken to furnish the cow with the kind of food best calculated to the required purpose How often it is found that complaint is made that such a cow is a bad milker, when the same animal, transferred to other hands has given entire satisfaction. This is easily explained by the fact that in the first case the cow has been kept on foul pasture, or on improper food. It becomes therefore peculiarly necessary to pursue the manner of feeding which experience has proved to be the most advantageous for the production of milk that is rich and sweet.

The first requisite in feeding is that the animal should have abundance of food so prepared that she can consume all she requires in as short a time as possible. She will then lie down, and have the more time to secrete her milk, and that milk to acquire richness. The pasture should be often changed, and if she is not in pasture but soiled, she must have young succulent clover, rye, oats, fodder-corn and millet. Cows fed, however, with food of too watery a nature, as are the above early in the season, require an addition of soiled food, such as meal, and a little hay. Otherwise the milk, although considerable in quantity, will be poor and thin, yielding no cream of consequence. When feeding roots they should be carefully selected, as having no symptoms of decay or rottenness, and should be mild in flavor, or the butter will be tainted. Mangle wurzels have become, from their luscious qualities, a favorite food for dairy cows, and are used extensively in Europe, and to some extent in this country. I hope they will come into use here to the same extent as there. They require much care and judgment in their use, and should never be given before January, as the longer they are kept the less acidity is produced by them, and even then, in my opinion, they should always be accompained by from four to six pounds of Indian meal to every bushel, to correct the irritation caused by their sole use. Many dairies of good cows have, within my own knowledge, been weakened so as to cause barrenness, for want of attending to this requisite. The best roots in my opinion, that can be given, are carrots and mangles succeeding each other from the time they are required till the cow returns to pasture. Brewers' grains, and mangels fed alone, are only to be used for creating a large quantity of milk in which quality is not sought. I consider brewers' grains utterly inadmissible for the dairy cow, and mangels to be used in the manner above stated as a change of diet.

The cow and the horse can pasture well together, but no other animal should be allowed to run in the same field. Pigs and poultry spoil and taint the feed a good deal. All rank weeds must be carefully extricated, and garden refuse, such as weeds kept out of the cows reach especially shrubs and hedges cuttings, &c. These things are often poisonous, and occasion the cow to abort. The same remark will apply to dead and putrid matter. Let the pasture be free from ponds and other dirty drinking places where the water is fouled and rendered unwholesome by decaying matter or the drainage from dung heaps and the habit which cattle have of standing and dropping their manure in it for hours together. A clean tub, or tank, should be used for watering the cattle, and kept supplied with clean, sweet water, which if pumped from a well, should be exposed to the air in summer a considerable time before use. As a principle of economy, I strongly advocate the practice of keeping milch cows in the yard or stables at nights all through the year. They spoil much grass, especially in full strong pasture, during the night, and are not benefited by being in the dewy grass too early in the morning. The manure would also be saved, where it is valuable, instead of being dropped along some fence where it is lost, and where the cattle would naturally lie down. During the winter, when tied up in stalls, great advantages is derived from thoroughly cleaning the cattle occasionally with a brush, as they cannot then turn around to lick themselves, or rub as they would in the field.—Correspondent of Country Gentleman.

Work not a rod of land more than you can work well. It is easier and more profitable to reap six by handsome fours, one acre than fifty from fens, &c.

Buckeye Force Pump.

The Buckeye is the very latest improvement in Pumps. It is constructed with air-chambers which eliminate every water. Hose can be attached to the Buckeye Pump, and water can be thrown from any point in the case of fire. You can water your Orchard and Yard, Wash Windows, Wash Buggies, and have a ever ready on your own premises at no more cost than an ordinary pump. It is also a great improvement in Wind Engines. Call and see these pumps in operation, or for particulars address

Iron Turbine Wind Engine
