Poetry.

Invocation to Rain in Summer.
WILLIAM COX DENNETT.
O gentle, gentle summer rain,
Let not the silver lily pine,
The drooping lily pine in vain
To feel that dewy touch of thine
To drink thy freshness once again,
O gentle, gentle summer rain.

Select Tale.

TURNED FROM THE DOOR.

"No tramps here," said I, and I shut the door in his face, I did. The wind blew so I could hardly do it, and the sleet was beating upon the pane, and the bare trees were groaning and moaning as they suffered in the storm. "No tramps here; I'm a lone woman, and I'm afraid of 'em."

picked it up. It was an old tobacco pouch, ever so much like the one I gave Charlie with the fringe around it, and written on it in ink, 'From C. F. to R. H.' and on the inside was a bit of tobacco, and an old pipe, and a letter, a ruffled old letter; and when I spread it out I saw on the top, 'My dear son.'

condemn me if you like; I am afraid God will. Three times he came back; three times he asked for only a crust and a place to lie, and I drove him away—I, I—and he's lying in the road now. Oh if I had only known!

Weeds of Woe.
When the heart is heavy, and all earthly things look dreary to mortals, who would care very little how they appeared to the side world if left to themselves?

Words of Wisdom.
We would tell the attorney about the INGLE over before editors, and buy our goods, which of all styles quality, color, and speciality of Goods, we have in our store.

Some Curious Ways.
Some women have curious ways of hiding their money. The Cincinnati Commercial says: "Mrs. Hanson put fifty dollars in the oven of her stove one night to keep it safe. Next morning, after breakfast the national debt had been diminished exactly that much."
