A NARROW ESCAPE.

Just before the battle of Cedar Creek one of Caster's troopers. named Dave Harrison, had an adventure full of paril. In the absence of regular scruts he was detailed to work his way up the valley and discover all he could regarding the enemy's position, and he entered upon the enterprise with alacrity and confidence. Dave was known as a quiet, cool, enduring man, doing his daty under all circumstances and winning the gool will of the officers an I in camp or on the murch.

It was not the intention to sen! the trooper forward as a spy, but his instructions were to some over the neutral but dangerous ground between outposts and as near the enemy as he could. He left our camp in his Federal uniform, armed with a pair of revolvers and a kinfe. and there were plenty of e otkers to predict that he would never return.
