From this last news concerning the President we can only gather that he is, beyond dispute, on the very verge of the grave. The attendant physicians, attendants, the cabinet officers, the forty millions of the President's friends dislike to surrender the last hope and yield to the inevitable. We are exceedingly sorry and hope the assassin may be given a speedy and fair trial. However, in the event of President Garfield's death the nation has ample assurance that the then President Arthur and the eminent men whom he will select to fill out his administration of the Government will adopt wise measures and assist powerfully that the nation may move on as if such an event had not occurred.

Hon. Galusha A. Grow suggests an amendment to the constitution by which the President would be relieved of the load of duties devolved upon him. Mr. Grow would limit the appointing power of the President to his cabinet, the foreign ministers and the judges of the United States courts, placing the selection of subordinate officers in the hands of the heads of departments. Still further to relieve the President, the ex-speaker would make the Vice President a member of the cabinet.

The Democratic State Central Committee met at Harrisburg on Wednesday of last week, and resolved that the State Convention should be held at Williamsport, on Wednesday, the 28th of September. Chairman Dill was authorized to appoint a committee of seven Pennsylvania Democrats to draft rules for the government of the party in Pennsylvania, and the committee to report to the meeting of the State Committee at Williamsport on the evening of September 27th.

In view of Hartmann having declared his intention to become a citizen, an esteemed contemporary asks "What is Hartmann, Mr. Blaine?" and presses for reply. It may be that the able Secretary of State, if he answers Hartmann is a confessed and boasting murderer, a good specimen of a bad type, a scurvy fellow who has overreached himself—who gains nothing by declaring his intentions, and will be promptly handed over if the Russian Government asks for him. Such a reply would have the merit of being to the point, a characteristic of all the acts of the Secretary of State.—Press.

Colonel Corbin, master of ceremonies at the Yorktown Centennial, has issued a circular regarding the arrangements for the celebration which is to take place October 18, 19, 20 and 21. Present advices promise a military representation from nearly every State in the Union. Above 10,000 troops have already signified their intention of being present, and it is believed the militia alone to take part in the celebration will exceed thirty thousand. Many States will send full regiments together with the Governors of most of the States, accompanied by their staffs. For the reception and proper comfort of the latter a building is to be erected. Adjutant Generals of States and commanding officers of troops intending to participate are requested to call for any information concerning the celebration that may in any manner aid in rendering the occasion worthy the great event it is designed to commemorate.

In one year sixty-four feet have been added to the height of the Washington monument. There is also curbstone enough on the ground to add thirty feet more which will be laid as rapidly as possible. Its speedy completion now depends only on the rapidity with which the marble can be quarried and delivered.

Some of the Letters and Postal Cards Which Are Addressed to Guiteau.

WASHINGTON, August 18.—Guiteau has, as heretofore stated, been engaged in writing up his life, which he says will make a book of about 500 pages, and the episode of yesterday morning seems not to have interfered greatly with his work. In the pages he wrote yesterday, and which were handed to the officer, he speaks of "the late President Garfield and writes of Mr. Arthur as President of the United States. This impression he has doubtless got from the guards having been doubled and the general aspect of affairs about the jail. The mail for the assassin is about equal to that of a Member of Congress. There has recently accumulated half a peck of postal cards and letters. So many come it is suspected the parties take this means of advertising their business, expecting their communications will be made public through the papers. Among the postal cards received one postmarked Springfield, O., reads as follows:

Charles Guiteau, will give you $500 per night to lecture after you have served eight years in Dry Tortugas. Will advertise you as the great nailing, but will not be responsible for the caprices of Judge Lynch.

Another from Corsicana, Texas, is as follows:

Charles, you had best sell off your village, and get you land on an old fogy as we have here. It would be doing a little good for the evil you have done to an innocent man.

Another from Vincennes, Ind., has a pen picture representing a hanging bee with the following:

To Garden: How goes the trap and rope to-day?

Another represents a steamer going to sea, the captain to pull Guiteau, with rope attached to hands and feet. Guiteau is represented screaming, "Stop, stop," help, and on it is written:

You have no head till now, and I suppose you are happy.

The devil is represented with a barrel ready inscribed, patiently waiting, "I am coming." Another has a coffin inscribed, "Sacred to the memory of C. J. G., assassin and villain," under which is, "Charles J. Guiteau's proper resting-place." Another from Carlstadt, Texas, is as follows:

Charles Guiteau, my heart swells with emotion when I witness the persecution you are exposed to in future. You ill merit will ably and vastly you shall have your reward, such only as I am warranted to bestow upon my faithful agents. Should you need anything further to render your present condition more endurable, I will send seven legions of little black angels armed with red hot pincers to make it pleasant for you. Yours until death, when we will have a happy reunion.

SATAN.

A Massive monument of Scotch granite has just been erected in Greenwood cemetery, New York, to the late William M. Tweed by his children. It bears simply the inscription of his birth and death and that of his wife. Tweed died about three years ago. Had he been living now he would have been about 58 years of age, in the prime of a politician's life. In the days of his prosperity Mr. Tweed used to say that he would live until he was 70, but he didn't count upon the accidents that sometimes befall aspiring statesmen. With all his faults Tweed was generous to the poor. In a single year he gave $10,000 to the indigent of his senatorial district. He was an attendant at All Saints' Episcopal church, in Henry street, and gave liberally to the parish. The then rector was an eloquent young Irishman, with a tendency toward conviviality. In order to cure the clergyman of his crook in the elbow, Tweed raised a purse of $2,500 to send to Europe. $1,000 of which he gave himself. The clergyman was benefited by the change, but afterward fell again into his old habits. Tweed now sleeps under the sod of Greenwood, and the clergyman is a patient in Bloomingdale lunatic asylum, and both are almost forgotten. The Tweed family have little or nothing left of their large property. They spent everything in the endeavor to save him from the shame of imprisonment, and in the scuffle his friends robbed them right and left.

The story is told of a man in Paris who mysteriously left his wife and family. Supposing he was drowned a reward was offered for his body, when the man, who was not drowned, returned and claimed the reward for discovering his own body. Upon refusal to pay he entered suit and recovered the amount.

....The bridegroom slapped his bride's face two hours after marriage, as they were about to take a train at Whiteside, Ill., for a honeymoon tour. She stood still in surprise, but only for a moment. Then she seized his cane, belabored him well, and went back home with her parents.

That a human bite is as dangerous as that of any animal is shown by an occurrence in the German city of Nanster, where a man who was bitten in one of his fingers during a fight has had the alternative of losing his arm or his life. Blood poisoning set in and speedy amputation of the shoulder became necessary.

Four years ago Lieutenant Governor Tabor, of Colorado, kept a small store in Leadville. He "grubb staked" a couple of prospectors, and they discovered the famous Little Pittsburg mine. Tabor tried to trade his half of the claim to the mine for $2,500 worth of goods for his store, but the firm from whom he bought preferred to take his note. In three months the mine yielding him $150,000, and in all he has taken from it $1,300,000. His wealth is now estimated at from $4,000,000 to $8,000,000, all acquired within four years. But a great many more men are struck by lightning than by such sudden prosperity.
