Principles are Permanent

There are evident reasons why Republicans should stand by the principles of their party, and maintain them supreme before the country. Parties originate among the people, and are intended to conserve the public good; they consequently require time to establish the work to be established. A want of stability has caused the wreck of many well-laid schemes for the public welfare, and it becomes an absolute necessity—in order to promote the intended purpose that patriotism has conceived for the general weal—that there shall be some reasonable hope of the permanency of these principles. As "the rolling stone gathers no moss," nor the untrained vine prolific fruits, neither can there be that certainty of securing an advance position, by active and vigorous organization, unless some dependence can be placed upon their true and faithful supporters. We build for prosperity, and they make a great mistake who fail to see the importance of laying the foundation deep and strong. The systems that enter into the organizations of the people, to carry out the principles upon which parties are formed, make it necessary that there shall be some assurance that every adverse wind will not drive the ship out upon treacherous waters. This also comprehends the absolute necessity for competent persons to guide affairs that there may not exist "confusion worse confounded."

The success of the Republican party depends only upon the unimpeachable purity of its principles, but not the grand achievements it has been enabled to secure, and those in prospect of still greater and nobler character, in the extended field that daily opens to human endeavor. There is a constant growth of ideas, and a never ending resolution of progress in the unfolding panorama of politics. This demands a anticipation of the wants of the State and nation, that such a party must be on the alert to meet, in order to prove its capacity to grasp the problem of political economy, and grapple successfully with the opposing forces.

There has never been a canvas without opposition, and there is no reason to doubt the certainty of present success, especially compared with the success of 1872. That correlation of ideas only is worthy to be called principles that will continue to overcome resistance and maintain their high standing. Never since the organization of the Republican party have they received a portion of the Republican leaders, and there are few who do not see and feel the force of the fact that nothing will be gained by substituting Cassidy's silent boy Bob" for Gen. Beaver the eloquent exponent of the great ideas that have so often carried our flag to victory.

Bi-Centennial Notes.

That the people of our county may know the many attractions of the celebration in Philadelphia, we will note from time to time the main features of the various days.

Tuesday, October 24th, is set apart for the representation of the landing of William Penn at Blue Anchor Inn, now Dock Street wharf, Philadelphia. Dock Street runs from Third Street between Chestnut and Walnut south-easterly to the Delaware River; the wharf being between Spruce and Pine Streets, the second and third streets south of Walnut.)

The decorations of river and land craft will be of a magnitude without parallel in the history of Philadelphia; and on the same day the civic processions will be on a scale of unusual grandeur.

Firemen, with apparatus, comparing the different systems of years gone by with that of the present, from the old hand and hand engine to the steam-engine, and its plug and suction connections, will form the second grand feature of the day.

Fire companies from all parts of the State, and many from adjoining States, will take part in the procession, and the display promises to be larger and finer than any fireman's parade which has ever taken place.

Look out for later an announcement of cheap excursions to Philadelphia from the various points on the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, and do not miss seeing the finest series of processions ever inaugurated.

Grand display of fireworks in the evening.

Wednesday, October 25th, trades' display and Welsh singing societies, moving tableau throughout the streets in the evening.

Thorough description of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday processions will be given in subsequent numbers.

Get ready to go, and do not forget the day and their attractions.
