Reading in Shops.

The relation of an apparently unimportant fact is attended sometimes by benefits quite incalculable; and it is in hope that the proprietors of some of the manufactories in this city may be led to further inquiries up on the subject, that we notice a plan of reading which has been practiced for a long time in the establishment of Mr. J. W. Orr, engraver, at No. 75 Nassau street, New York. In Mr. Orr's shop there are between twenty and thirty hands constantly employed in wood engraving, a branch of business which is carried on, to be sure, with very little noise. Two or three years ago, in order to check the disputes which frequently arose from the trifling conversation always apt to spring up where a number of persons are employed, he purchased a book, and placing it in the hands of one of his men, requested him to read it aloud for the benefit of the others. The work was a very interesting one, and the reading could not fail to be agreeable to all who listened. At the close of the day, Mr. Orr, upon examining the work performed by his hands, discovered that they had even accomplished more than their usual task; and thus encouraged, he continued the business of reading on the following day. Everything moved on with the utmost order in the shop; every one listened with great attention; and the amount of labor performed was fully equal to that of the day before. This was regarded as a sufficient test of the plan, and Mr. Orr, ventured to engage a person for a short period to spend the day in his shop in reading such works as he might select for the entertainment of his men. This engagement has yet continued, and Mr. Orr declares that this man is one of the most valuable persons in his employ. Every morning the leading city papers are read by him aloud, and 'the men of the establishment are not only perfectly posted up in regard to the news of the day, but are also rendered familiar with all its current literature while pursuing their ordinary avocations.

It is true that there are many kinds ofbusiness in the conducting of which there is too much noise to admit of anything like this; but there are certainly many shops in this city in which something similar might be practiced with great advantage both to emplovers and employed. The success of Mr. Orr is certainly worthy of consideration .-Newark Advertiser.

The Boston Telegraph thinks that Pierce's Border Ruffian message encouraged Rust to make his assault on Mr. Greeley, and that-Rust will now be a prominent can-didate for Governor of Kansas, and may aspire to the Presidency. As the doer is greator than the mere proposer and theorist, so is Rust more worthy of the support of the great National Democratic party than Pierce.
