

By a telegraphic despatch received at the Montrose office this (Wednesday) morning, we learn that DANIEL F. TREMANS, the fugitive candidate, is elected Mayor of New York by more than 2000 majority over Fernando Wood, the Democratic candidate.

Senator Sumner returns from Europe to resume his seat in the United States Senate, with his health in a great degree restored; but he still carries (as the Rev. T. Hemstead would say) "the brand of Cain on his brow," stamped there by the bludgeon of bully Brooks.

The National Merchant, published at No. 318 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, at 60 cents a year, and having a weekly circulation of 75,000, affords a good medium for advertisers who wish to reach all parts of the United States.

Post Office Appointment.—Alvin Day has been appointed Postmaster at Tunkhannock, in place of G. A. Chase, resigned.—Tunkhannock Democrat.

Mr. Day has also become editor of the Democrat in place of the Ex-Postmaster.

For the Independent Republican.

Censored Rhymes. Messrs Editors.—Were you aware that Milton's "Paradise Lost" rhymes? Probably not; but near the close of Book VII, where Raphael is describing the creation to Adam, observe the following passage:

"So even and more accomplished the sixth day; Yet you all the Creator from his work, Desisting, though unwearied, yet returned, Up to the heaven of heavens, his high abode, Thence to behold this new-created world." The addition of his empire, how it shined In prospect from his throne, how good, how fair, Answering his great end. By the word, Followed with exclamation, and the second Symphonies of ten thousand harps, that tuned Angelic harmonies: the earth, the air Resounded (how remember'd, for thou heardest,) The heavens and all the constellations rung, The planets in their station listening stood, While the bright pomp ascended jubilate.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and the demagogues of the press and the pulpit.

But say you, "Friend Correspondent, in one of your former communications you informed us that a majority of the non-slaveholding masses there, deprecate the existence of the institution, and rather hinted that in case of an insurrection of the negroes, those poor whites would not turn out to quell it. This and your picture of an attempted nigger-stealing seem to clash."

Be not too fast, friend reader. I admit that it may seem that you rather have me in a dilemma here, but I think that a grain or two of the philosophy of human nature will release us from such seeming dilemma.

Was it told by the poor Buns that in his boyhood days he was instructed in the full faith of all the bogblyns, ghosts, fairies, and enchantments which were peculiar to the Scottish people in his day, but as he grew to manhood, he became instructed in the philosophy of those superstitions, and cast them off as the mere rubbish of a barbarous age, which lingered upon the rear of his more enlightened time; yet in his nocturnal walks, while passing by suspicious places, it frequently required an effort of philosophy to shake off the idle terrors thus excited, though no one could be more skeptical in such matters than himself.

So much for early impressions. Furthermore, we are told that the greatest difficulty under which the primitive Christian Church labored, was the tendency manifested by those adopting the new faith, to relapse into their former idolatrous worship. So incurable seemed this disposition, we find it recorded, that many of even the most rigid disciplinarians were found paying their accustomed devotions to the secular deities, dreading to renounce them absolutely, lest they should withhold the dews and rains of heaven, and visit the earth with pestilence, famine, &c.

So much in attestation of the Divine saying that it is the disposition of men as well as dogs to return to their vomit, and swine to their wallowing places. TENNESSEE, November 24, 1857.

For the Independent Republican. Education. At a Teachers' Institute, held at Bacon's, in Nicholson, on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, under the direction of C. R. Davis, Supt. of Wyoming Co., the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Common School system of this State as one which ought to have a fair and impartial trial, before it is condemned, and that in our opinion it will, if faithfully carried out, prove productive of a great amount of good in the education of the youth of our beloved Commonwealth.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and the demagogues of the press and the pulpit.

But say you, "Friend Correspondent, in one of your former communications you informed us that a majority of the non-slaveholding masses there, deprecate the existence of the institution, and rather hinted that in case of an insurrection of the negroes, those poor whites would not turn out to quell it. This and your picture of an attempted nigger-stealing seem to clash."

Be not too fast, friend reader. I admit that it may seem that you rather have me in a dilemma here, but I think that a grain or two of the philosophy of human nature will release us from such seeming dilemma.

Was it told by the poor Buns that in his boyhood days he was instructed in the full faith of all the bogblyns, ghosts, fairies, and enchantments which were peculiar to the Scottish people in his day, but as he grew to manhood, he became instructed in the philosophy of those superstitions, and cast them off as the mere rubbish of a barbarous age, which lingered upon the rear of his more enlightened time; yet in his nocturnal walks, while passing by suspicious places, it frequently required an effort of philosophy to shake off the idle terrors thus excited, though no one could be more skeptical in such matters than himself.

So much for early impressions. Furthermore, we are told that the greatest difficulty under which the primitive Christian Church labored, was the tendency manifested by those adopting the new faith, to relapse into their former idolatrous worship. So incurable seemed this disposition, we find it recorded, that many of even the most rigid disciplinarians were found paying their accustomed devotions to the secular deities, dreading to renounce them absolutely, lest they should withhold the dews and rains of heaven, and visit the earth with pestilence, famine, &c.

So much in attestation of the Divine saying that it is the disposition of men as well as dogs to return to their vomit, and swine to their wallowing places. TENNESSEE, November 24, 1857.

For the Independent Republican. Education. At a Teachers' Institute, held at Bacon's, in Nicholson, on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, under the direction of C. R. Davis, Supt. of Wyoming Co., the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Common School system of this State as one which ought to have a fair and impartial trial, before it is condemned, and that in our opinion it will, if faithfully carried out, prove productive of a great amount of good in the education of the youth of our beloved Commonwealth.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and the demagogues of the press and the pulpit.

But say you, "Friend Correspondent, in one of your former communications you informed us that a majority of the non-slaveholding masses there, deprecate the existence of the institution, and rather hinted that in case of an insurrection of the negroes, those poor whites would not turn out to quell it. This and your picture of an attempted nigger-stealing seem to clash."

Be not too fast, friend reader. I admit that it may seem that you rather have me in a dilemma here, but I think that a grain or two of the philosophy of human nature will release us from such seeming dilemma.

Was it told by the poor Buns that in his boyhood days he was instructed in the full faith of all the bogblyns, ghosts, fairies, and enchantments which were peculiar to the Scottish people in his day, but as he grew to manhood, he became instructed in the philosophy of those superstitions, and cast them off as the mere rubbish of a barbarous age, which lingered upon the rear of his more enlightened time; yet in his nocturnal walks, while passing by suspicious places, it frequently required an effort of philosophy to shake off the idle terrors thus excited, though no one could be more skeptical in such matters than himself.

So much for early impressions. Furthermore, we are told that the greatest difficulty under which the primitive Christian Church labored, was the tendency manifested by those adopting the new faith, to relapse into their former idolatrous worship. So incurable seemed this disposition, we find it recorded, that many of even the most rigid disciplinarians were found paying their accustomed devotions to the secular deities, dreading to renounce them absolutely, lest they should withhold the dews and rains of heaven, and visit the earth with pestilence, famine, &c.

So much in attestation of the Divine saying that it is the disposition of men as well as dogs to return to their vomit, and swine to their wallowing places. TENNESSEE, November 24, 1857.

For the Independent Republican. Education. At a Teachers' Institute, held at Bacon's, in Nicholson, on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, under the direction of C. R. Davis, Supt. of Wyoming Co., the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Common School system of this State as one which ought to have a fair and impartial trial, before it is condemned, and that in our opinion it will, if faithfully carried out, prove productive of a great amount of good in the education of the youth of our beloved Commonwealth.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and the demagogues of the press and the pulpit.

But say you, "Friend Correspondent, in one of your former communications you informed us that a majority of the non-slaveholding masses there, deprecate the existence of the institution, and rather hinted that in case of an insurrection of the negroes, those poor whites would not turn out to quell it. This and your picture of an attempted nigger-stealing seem to clash."

Be not too fast, friend reader. I admit that it may seem that you rather have me in a dilemma here, but I think that a grain or two of the philosophy of human nature will release us from such seeming dilemma.

Was it told by the poor Buns that in his boyhood days he was instructed in the full faith of all the bogblyns, ghosts, fairies, and enchantments which were peculiar to the Scottish people in his day, but as he grew to manhood, he became instructed in the philosophy of those superstitions, and cast them off as the mere rubbish of a barbarous age, which lingered upon the rear of his more enlightened time; yet in his nocturnal walks, while passing by suspicious places, it frequently required an effort of philosophy to shake off the idle terrors thus excited, though no one could be more skeptical in such matters than himself.

So much for early impressions. Furthermore, we are told that the greatest difficulty under which the primitive Christian Church labored, was the tendency manifested by those adopting the new faith, to relapse into their former idolatrous worship. So incurable seemed this disposition, we find it recorded, that many of even the most rigid disciplinarians were found paying their accustomed devotions to the secular deities, dreading to renounce them absolutely, lest they should withhold the dews and rains of heaven, and visit the earth with pestilence, famine, &c.

So much in attestation of the Divine saying that it is the disposition of men as well as dogs to return to their vomit, and swine to their wallowing places. TENNESSEE, November 24, 1857.

For the Independent Republican. Education. At a Teachers' Institute, held at Bacon's, in Nicholson, on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, under the direction of C. R. Davis, Supt. of Wyoming Co., the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Common School system of this State as one which ought to have a fair and impartial trial, before it is condemned, and that in our opinion it will, if faithfully carried out, prove productive of a great amount of good in the education of the youth of our beloved Commonwealth.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and the demagogues of the press and the pulpit.

But say you, "Friend Correspondent, in one of your former communications you informed us that a majority of the non-slaveholding masses there, deprecate the existence of the institution, and rather hinted that in case of an insurrection of the negroes, those poor whites would not turn out to quell it. This and your picture of an attempted nigger-stealing seem to clash."

Be not too fast, friend reader. I admit that it may seem that you rather have me in a dilemma here, but I think that a grain or two of the philosophy of human nature will release us from such seeming dilemma.

Was it told by the poor Buns that in his boyhood days he was instructed in the full faith of all the bogblyns, ghosts, fairies, and enchantments which were peculiar to the Scottish people in his day, but as he grew to manhood, he became instructed in the philosophy of those superstitions, and cast them off as the mere rubbish of a barbarous age, which lingered upon the rear of his more enlightened time; yet in his nocturnal walks, while passing by suspicious places, it frequently required an effort of philosophy to shake off the idle terrors thus excited, though no one could be more skeptical in such matters than himself.

So much for early impressions. Furthermore, we are told that the greatest difficulty under which the primitive Christian Church labored, was the tendency manifested by those adopting the new faith, to relapse into their former idolatrous worship. So incurable seemed this disposition, we find it recorded, that many of even the most rigid disciplinarians were found paying their accustomed devotions to the secular deities, dreading to renounce them absolutely, lest they should withhold the dews and rains of heaven, and visit the earth with pestilence, famine, &c.

So much in attestation of the Divine saying that it is the disposition of men as well as dogs to return to their vomit, and swine to their wallowing places. TENNESSEE, November 24, 1857.

For the Independent Republican. Education. At a Teachers' Institute, held at Bacon's, in Nicholson, on the 26th, 27th, and 28th of November, under the direction of C. R. Davis, Supt. of Wyoming Co., the following resolutions were discussed and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we regard the Common School system of this State as one which ought to have a fair and impartial trial, before it is condemned, and that in our opinion it will, if faithfully carried out, prove productive of a great amount of good in the education of the youth of our beloved Commonwealth.

Resolved, That we do not think a system should be condoned because it has a few faults, believing that those faults can much better be corrected than to change the system.

Resolved, That we believe the office of County Superintendent to be one of the highest importance; that it should be filled only by such as are well qualified, apt to teach, and have a love for the business.

Resolved, That in order to secure the greatest benefit from our Common School System, we deem it essential that the interest of parents and citizens generally be awakened to the importance of the subject of education; that they provide none but faithful, competent teachers, and personally co-operate with them, and that they provide none but convenient and comfortable School Houses, with all the necessary appliances of books and apparatus.

Resolved, That we regard uniformity of School books as highly important to facilitate education.

Resolved, That teachers ought to be best of their ability to endeavor to inculcate moral principles in the minds of their pupils.

Resolved, That inasmuch as our high authority "the laborer is worthy of his hire," we believe the competent teachers of our Common Schools ought to be liberally rewarded for their toil.

Resolved, That we, as teachers and citizens will continue to labor faithfully for the cause of education, believing that by proper exertion Little Wyoming, may yet be made to occupy a respectable position among her sister counties.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the North Branch Democrat, and newspapers at Montrose for publication.

WALLACE TREMANS, P. E. L. William Scott, Sec'y.

For the Independent Republican. BROOKLYN, Nov. 24th, 1857.

Messrs. Editors: Dear Sirs.—Ought not the Laws of a State to be known by her people? Should not the citizens of a Republic, especially, be familiar with the principles of the laws by which they are governed? Would not this be creditable to her intelligence, and favorable to her perpetuity? Is it not lamentable that it should be otherwise?

If my inferences are correct, would not such an attainment be facilitated and rendered practicable by the incorporation of those laws into a plain straight-forward form? Why could not the Laws of Pennsylvania be collected from the various sources whence they are derived—from the Common Law, from Eng. Statutes here in force, from Judicial Decisions, and from Legislative enactments—and be connectedly and methodically arranged by subjects, so as to render their application clear, unless when modified by peculiar and unusual circumstances?

Then let subsequent Court-constructions and decisions (such as are of a general character, which are few) and subsequent enactments of the same kind, be extensively published. Even if such revision and codification of our laws should not induce a title of our population to inform themselves, nevertheless would not the increased convenience to the legal profession resulting therefrom, be amply sufficient to warrant the undertaking?

These considerations, I believe, are equally applicable to every State, and are equally applicable to every individual and society, in many cases as well as to the State.

It is the history of the present institution is known, even by the unlearned, as not only extending back to the primitive days of Christianity, but far anterior to that, into the misty days and ages of antiquity, to its legitimate source, the most barbarous of the heathen gods. We are told that its righteousness is established by immemorial custom, and by the sanction of Holy Writ! So say the priests and