NEW YORK

The Second and Improved Edition of the work, as now offered to the public, is a considerable entargement on the first Edition, and contains a number of new discussions of important points in English Grammar hitherto but little examined, nevertheless of great importance to the stability of the language.— It will be seen that the work now covers the whole field of English Grammar, and brings the subject up to the latest period of the history of the language the peculiar views of almost every extant writer on English Grammar being, in some part of the work, either directly commented on, or incidentally

BROWN'S GRAMMAR IMPROVED. THE INSTITUTES OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR. Methodically arranged, &c. &c. Designed for the use of Schools, Academics, and Private Learners.

By Goold Brown: A new Stereotype edition, garfully revised by the author. 335 pages, 11mo.

Price 60 cents.

The excellence of Brown's Institutes of Grammar is admitted on all hands; and notwithstanding the multitude of school grammars which have from first 160 last come in competition with the Institutes; it has steadily advanced in public favor, and is largely in use throughout the country. The doctrines of the work are those which are deducible from a common sense view of the subject of language, and a just consideration of the analogies of speech. And in point of perspicuous arrangement, accuracy of deficonsideration of the analogies of speech. And in point of perspicuous arrangement, accuracy of definition, fullness of illustration, and comprehensiveness of plan, the work is considered by competent judges to be unrivaled. In the new edition of the Institutes, teachers who have been accustomed to use the work, will see many important amplifications and improvements, giving to the whole more of completeness as to the subject, and a better adaptation of the plan to the general purposes of instruction.
