I do not undervalue other instrumentalities, cspecially the higher ones of a religious na-ture. But, at the same time, I believe that a chcerful, social Christian is better than a sour and ascetic one. That good old Puri-tan, Richard Baxter, used to regret his melancholy and gloomy temperament, arising mainly from bodily infirmity, and in the latter part of his life strove to introduce a more cheerful disposition among his religious friends. 'True religion,' he says, 'is not a matter of fears, tears, and scruples; it doth principally consist in obedience, love, and "Unpatural repression in one direction is ure to lead to a corresponding protuberance of deformity in another. Does an idle man like conversation ? he obtains it, not from some man equally yawning and vacant with himself, but from some active and well-plenistical mind, which cannot properly spare him a moment, though he generally contrives to take an hour. Say he dabbles in literature, and in attempts at easy writing, makes, a as usual, somewhat hard reading; to whom does he apply to get his diction trimmed, and his work licked into shape, but to some dent; more passionate, than thoughtfulz-hence the principle with him is not to do, but ery minute is required for his ordinary and unavoidable labor, or who can only spare for this supererrogatory drudgery some intervals of leisure which he ought rather to spend in healthy exercise, or that to him greatest of all luxuries, simple vacation of mind? The idle never think of plundering the idle; they are a set of luxurious dogs, and regard no booty as worth having unless it be a serious deprivation to its former owners. It is upon the fully or over-occupied man that they like to prey. Five minutes from such a person is a greater acquisition than a whole day from one who has only a little to do.-Robert Chambers. THE HEAD OF THE FISH .--- A most curious fact was communicated to me the other day by one of Edinburgh's brightest ornaments, and who, like many men of true genius, has a strong natural turn for angling. A ques-tion was proposed to a party of mathemati-cians—" Of what shape a solid body ought to be to pass through a fluid with the least possible resistance?" By application of the strictest mathematical principles it was solved, and the form discovered coincided exactly with that of a fish's head .-- J. Colqu-
