rywhere, are becoming less robust every year. The men, who are out of doors mos of the time, suffering comparatively little in jury; but the females, confined as they are, day and night, to these close apartments, are growing pale, and sallow, and nervous, and are breaking down prematurely.

Every one should look at this matter, and if possible, apply a remedy. A partial one, at least, is easily obtained. Make an opening in your fire-place, as large as a stove-pipe, and another in the chimney-breast, near the ceiling, for the escape of foul and over heated sir. Then, to supply the room with fresh air, and to promote a good circulation, attach springs or pulleys to the upper sashes of your windows, so that they can be drop-ped a few inches from the top. It is well to hang a curtain before the opening, to prevent too sudden drafts of air upon the occupants of the room. This, or some other contrivance for introducing fresh nir, and carrying off the impure, will do much to promote the health and comfort of our families.

Everett, Choate, and Winthrop. The Machias (Me.) Republican, reviewing the political state of Massachusetts, thus alludes to three stranded representatives of cot ton Whiggery:"Literature has ever been the hospital for decayed politicians to retire to, and nurse their reputations. These men are already cohspic ous in that uninvidious field. Mr Everett has a gift at necrology, delights to forget the present in the memory of the more glorious past. He stands on the top of the morning, shaking his eloquent fing sat the antecedent midnight, exclaiming, "These were the times!" He can write the eulogy of the Democratic party.

"Choate's passion for it must be a purely professional one. He sees in it a detected culprit-blood in its boots, but plenty of money. He warms towards its intense and palpable rescality as a physiologist gloats over a new subject, or a naturalist over a new bug. The people demand its arrest, its speedy arraignment and condign execution.

Mr. Choate interposes to defend it, and from now till 1860 let him be closeted with his client, listening to the confession, and prepar ing his ples. :

"As for Winthrop, he must lay himsel out on an epic poem; nothing short of this can fitly express his sublime sorrow. The frivolous age waits for a new Divine Comedy to tone it to seriousness and devotion .-When Homer was old, and, they say, blind, he wrote the Iliad. Let Mr. Winthrop, who, in his political blindness, has wardered away among the Democrats, and got lost, write his 'Menin aide' upon the terrible rage of Gen. Wilson, to the Whig party the direful spring of woes unnumbered. Happily, Mr. Longfellow has revived the epic hexameter for his use. It seems like poor singing, but very easy writing. Thus: "The wrath of Wilson I sing, Wilson the cobble
