Orthography.

Of late years' says the Century, frequent articles have appeared in the New York journals, particularly in the columns of the Evening Post, in reference to various points of orthography, which, though anonymously published, are known to prceeed from the pen of a gentleman of this city, Mr. Edward S. Gould, whose general contributions to the press have been neither few nor unimportant. In the last number of the Home Journal we notice an article from this source, in which the changes made by Webster in orthography are presented at a glance. As these changes have been and still are the subject of much discussion, the reader cannot but be obliged to the writer for this convenient exhibition of the whole matter. We print from a copy of the article revised by the author:

"Webster's orthography has been the stumbling block of the dictionary through its whole history. That is the feature of the work that has provoked the greatest hostility against it; that is the feature which has rendered this work really and permanently mischievous; and that is the feature for which no adequate excuse can be put forward. That peculiarity has impeded the sale of the work by thousands on thousands of copies, and yet that peculiarity is so insignificant in actual dimensions that it bears about the same proportion to the whole work that a mosquito bears to the bulk of a man he is tormenting. To exhibit the real magnitude of this petite misere before the eyes of our readers, so that they can weigh and measure it for themselves, we will now spread the entire monster in our columns—hands, feet, head, organs and dimensions—and we can imagine their exclamation; "What! is that all? That! Has that made so much uproar in the literary world?"

This list contains seventy two words, which with their derivatives, chiefly in Class II., (as travelling, travelled, traveller,) may amount to one hundred and forty in all. Some words may have been omitted; but one hundred and sixty would include every item of Webster's innovation.

We omit such words as public, music, physic, etc., formerly spelled with a final k; and honor, favor, etc., formerly spelled with a u, because those two classes of changes have been gradually adopted by good writers.

CHARACTER OF A GOOD TEACHER.—FROM THE NEW NOVEL, 'SYLVAN HOLT'S DAUGHTER.'—"Mrs. Sinclair proved to be a penetrating, vivacious woman, full of spirit and activity—one of those plain, common-sensical people who will never give to any circumstance more than its due weight. She had the art of attracting confidence, and her pupil, Margaret, fortunately took a liking to her at their first interview, which liking soon became mutual.

"It was not much in Margaret's way, to work steadily, hour after hour, and day after day—for first, though secret motive, seemed to be lost sight of altogether, and no secondary one was weighty enough to smooth the rough places on her path. But Mrs. Sinclair had one and only one view of her duty—she was there to teach and Margaret was there to learn, so she was resolutely and patiently blind to all her pupil's freaks of indolence or restiveness, and the more Margaret rebelled, the more she had to do."

☞ Of premature Spring weather, Sidney Smith said, in a letter: "We have had the mildest weather possible. A great part of the vegetable world is deceived and beginning to blossom—not merely foolish young plants without experience, but old plants that have been deceived before by premature springs—and for such one has no pity. The birds are all taken in and are building, the foolish flowers are blowing. Human creatures alone are in the secret, and know what is to happen in a week or two."

A Few Thoughts on Agriculture.

PINE GROVE, Susq. Co., Pa., April 6, 1859.

MESSRS. EDITORS:—Where is the "one column or more" devoted to agriculture, in your paper, that you promised your readers not long ago? Where are the farmers of Susquehanna County, that they do not respond to your invitation to write for the farmers' column? Have none of them anything to write, in regard to any of the various affairs of a farmer's business? no "experience" to tell for the benefit of the inexperienced? In short, isn't there any one among them that knows anything that any one else does not know, and that would be of benefit to the community at large?. If so, why do they not write, that the knowledge of one may become the knowledge of all, and a public benefit?

Such have been some of my reflections, as I have looked for the agricultural column in the Republican for a few weeks past, with the hope of finding some instruction from some of the intelligent farmers of Susquehanna County. Thinking that perhaps every one might be waiting for some one to begin, I have ventured to introduce the subject, hoping thereby to call forth the opinions and experience of others, more capable of imparting instruction on a subject of so great importance. Although it may be a "self evident truth that all men are created equal," as far as their "inalienable rights" are concerned; it is equally "self evident," that all farmers are not equally intelligent and successful in their business. As an evidence of this, observe the great diversity of opinion and practice, in the cultivation of any one crop. Take corn for example, as that has been suggested as "something to write about;" one farmer spreads the manure on his corn field, another puts it in the hill; one uses unfermented manure, the other wants it "well rotted" before applying it to the crop. Some advocate the new-fangled notion of level cultivation, while others adhere to the "good old way" of "hilling up corn," and ploughing deep between the rows; the reason for the latter practice, as given by a farmer(?) not long since, being, "the roots of the corn growing between the rows take up too much of the richness of the ground, which is needed by the corn." Absurd as are the theories of so called farmers, every man thinks his own way the right one, until he has reasons for adopting a different course. This being the case, let farmers who can write, write, and give their theory and practice with their reasons, and "compare notes;" give the results of this and that mode of cultivation &c. In that way all who "take the papers," can be gaining some useful knowledge of practical agriculture.

Although I do not profess to be a farmer, but only a learner, yet I am willing to give my opinion on the subject of raising corn, and give what I consider one of the best methods of securing a good crop. If any one has a better plan, let him make it known to the public through your "agricultural column." Select a piece of greensward, and if not already well manured, spread on a good coating of manure fresh from the barn yard and stables—if drawn and spread on in the winter or very early in the spring, all the better. It should be done long enough before ploughing to allow a considerable part of the fertilizing properties of the manure to "soak" into the soil. Plough the ground when it is dry enough to work up mellow; turn over the turf well, so that it will not need ploughing again, and when it is dry and warm enough for corn to grow, harrow the ground mellow without tearing up the turf, mark out the rows both ways across the field, and plant your corn, covering it about one and a half or two inches deep. To prevent the depredations of "wire worms" soak the seed in a solution of saltpetre for twelve hours before planting. As soon as the rows can be plainly seen, go over the field both ways with a good cultivator and hoe and cultivate sufficiently to secure the desired object, which is to keep out the weeds and keep the ground loose and mellow. As to "hilling up corn" you needn't do it unless you want to work for nothing, for you have no good reason to believe the corn will ever pay you for it.

Now Messrs. Editors and readers of the Republican, I have hastily given my plan of raising corn, which you can have gratis. I do not pretend that it is the best plan, but a very good one, and one that pays well for the labor expended. Let others give us their views on the subject; and if any one wishes for my reasons for my plan of cultivation &c. I am ready to give them when called for. But for the first I think I have occupied my share of the "farmers column." FRANK.

IMPROVING OUR HIGHWAYS.—The article on roads in the January number of the Genesee Farmer I like very much. Years ago we tried small stones, putting those on top that would break easiest to the size and shape of a goose egg, taking special pains where the wheels run; but it was too rough. They would not pound as easy as limestone. We find we can gravel eight inches deep and draw a mile for one dollar per rod, and thus make a road A No. 1. We sometimes turnpike one year, and early the next summer put on from five to eight inches of gravel.—We lay our roads well up, first making them as narrow and rounding as we can comfortably use; and allow no water to stand at the sides. The best road I ever saw is the one running through Weedport to Auburn—a blue hard gravel on top of plank. The company tried taking out plank and putting in gravel, but thought best to let the plank remain. Plank roads—say what you will of them—have given the country some idea of what a good road may do for us, and we are not contented now with a poor one.

If our experiment in plank roads induces the improvement I hope for, it will yet be better than money spent at the tavern—though what could induce us to show so much folly I can not tell. HANNIBAL.

☞ Farmer John hath certain notions of his own in regard to medicines for his family, but whatever these may be, he holdeth fast to the old-fashioned All-o-path-ic treatment for sick land. He believeth particularly in stimulating the land with large doses of organic manures, and strenuously contendeth that thirty loads per acre of barnyard manure well mixed with muck, is the best of all medicines for a weak, emaciated soil; and Farmer John's experience confirmeth his theory.

ONE HOUR.—There was once a lad who at fourteen was apprenticed to a soap boiler.—One of his resolutions was to read one hour a day, or at least at that rate; and he had an old silver watch, left him by his uncle, which he timed his reading by. He stayed seven years with his master, and his master said when he was twenty one he knew as much as the old squire did. Now let us see how much time he had to read in seven years, at the rate of an hour a day. It would be twenty-five hundred and fifty-five hours, which, at the rate of eight reading hours a day, would be three hundred and nineteen days, equal to forty-five weeks, equal to eleven months; nearly a year reading. That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge would pile up a very large store. I am sure it is worth trying for. Try what you can do. Begin now.

☞ He who leaves early gets the best hat.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

A Compound Remedy, in which we have labored to produce the most effectual alterative that can be made. It is a concentrated extract of Para Sarsaparilla, so combined with other substances of still greater alterative power as to afford an effective antidote for the diseases Sarsaparilla is reputed to cure. It is believed that such a remedy is wanted by those who suffer from strumous complaints, and that one which will accomplish their cure is not a more immense service to this large class of unafflicted fellow citizens. How completely this compound will do it has been proven by experiment on many of the worst cases in the following complaints:

Scrofula, and Scrofulous Complaints, Eruptions, and Eruptive Diseases, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Tumors, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Syphilis and Syphilitic Affections, Mercurial Diseases, Dropsy, Neuralgia or Tic Douloureux, Debility, Dyspepsy and Indigestion, Erysipelas, Rose or St. Anthony's Fire, and indeed the whole class of complaints arising from impurity of the blood.

This compound will be found a great promoter of health, when taken in the spring, to expel the foul humors which festering the blood at that season of the year. By the timely expulsion of them many rankling disorders are nipped in the bud. Multitudes can, by the aid of this remedy, spare themselves from the endurance of foul eruptions and ulcerations, through which the system will strive to rid itself of corruptions, if not assisted to do this through the natural channels of the body by an alterative medicine. Cleanse out the vitiated blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions or sores; cleanse it when you find it lodged, sluggish or diseased in the veins; cleanse it whenever it is foul, and your feelings will tell you when. Even where no particular disorder is felt, people enjoy better health and live longer, for cleansing the blood. Keep the blood healthy and all is well; but when the pipes of life are disordered, there can be no healthy health. Something or other will be wrong, and the great machinery of life is disordered or deranged.

Sarsaparilla has, and deserves much the reputation of accomplishing the cures it has, but the world has been egregiously deceived by preparations of it, partly because the drug alone has not the virtue that is claimed for it, but more because many preparations, presuming to be concentrated extracts of it, contain but little of the virtue of Sarsaparilla, or any thing else.

During late years the public have been misled by large bottles, pretending to give a quart of Extract of Sarsaparilla for one dollar.—Most of these have been frauds upon the sick, for they not only contain little, if any, Sarsaparilla, but often no curative properties whatever. Hence, disappointment has followed the use of the various extracts of Sarsaparilla which flood the market, until the name itself is justly despised, and has become synonyma with imposition and cheat. Still we call this compound Sarsaparilla, and intend to supply such a remedy as shall redeem the name from the load of obloquy which rests upon it. And we think we have attained for belief that it has virtues which are available for the cure of many run of the diseases it is intended to cure. In order to secure their complete eradication from the system, the remedy should be judiciously taken according to direction on the bottle.
