An accident occurred on the Michigan Southern Railroad, near South Bend, Indiana, June 28th. The stream where it took place is naturally a small rivulet, but was much swollen by heavy rains, and the flood of wood which passed down probably choked the culvert, converting the embankment into a dam, and the great weight of water, with the concussion of the crossing train, caused the culvert to give way, and the train to be thrown from the track. There were about 150 persons on the train. Thirty three persons were taken from the ruins dead, and fifty or sixty others wounded. The train was running between ten and twenty miles an hour. The train going west passed over the embankment safely three hours before the
