SPECKLED DORKINGS.

COGES.—Breast black, red, or either color spotted with white. Tail black, or black and white; hackle and saddle red or spotted.

HENS.—Hackle dark, deep brown, or striped with gold. Body chocolate or light brown, spotted with white.

All Dorkings of both sexes should have deep, square bodies, broad backs, very full breasts, and white lega. They may have single or double combs, but all Dorkings must have five toes.

ted with white. The black, or black and white; hackle and saddle red or spotted.

Hers.—Hackle dark, deep brown, or striped with gold. Body chocolate or light brown, spotted with white.

All Dorkings of both sexes should have deep, aguare bodies, broad backs, very full breasts, and white legs. They may have single or double combs, but all Dorkings must have five toes.

GOLDEN-SPANGLED HAMBURGS.

Cocks.—Large double comb, full points, but neither overchanging the eye nor nostrils; the points clear and sharp, not smoothed over till the comb looke like fungus. Full pike behind, in the points clear and sharp, not smoothed over till the comb looke like fungus. Full pike behind, the comb looke like fungus. Full pike behind, the suppleion of a sickle feather, clear of any interest of plumage bright baft. The hackle well clouded, and, if possible, the color so distributed as to present no patches of black. The saddle should also be well clouded. All tile colors should be rich, especially on the wing, where a metallic black should bar and lace on a deep red or maroon ground.

The cock of the Silver Spangled is not shaded or clouded like the Golden in the backle and saddle, but he requires to have his tail quite white, with the exception of a black point at the extremity of each feather. A most accurately spangled breast is also required.

Hers.—Bright red, spiked and piked, modericative, with the exception of a black point at the extremity of each feather. A most accurately spangled breast is also required.

Hers.—Bright red, spiked and piked, modericative, with the exception of a black point at the extremity of each feather. A most accurately spangled breast is also required.

Hers.—Bright red, spiked and piked, modericative, with the exception of a black point at the extremity of each feather. A most accurately spangled breast is also required.

Hers.—Bright red, spiked and piked, modericative, with the exception of a black point at the end with the pike should incline upwards.

The hen of the Silver variety requires

Вьаск Намвнов. BLACK HAMBROS.

These birds are subject to the same rules as the other breeds, simplified by the fact that the plumage is of one color only. The combs must be spiked, piked firm and straight as in the others, and the deaf-ear scrupulously white.

SPANISH.

Course - Layre earth, and perfectly unright

ers, and the deaf-ear scrupulously white.

SPANISH.

Cocks.—Large comb, and perfectly upright It should also be even on the surface, having no indentation popularly known as the "thumbmark" in iront. Spotless white face from the comb to the throat. Long, deep, smooth, white ear-lobe; very full tail. Erect haughty carriage unmixed plumage; long blue legs.

Hena.—Large, soft, smooth, red comb, hanging over, and concealing one side of the face.—Face thoroughly white. Very full breast; body tapering to the tail, which is full, and carried erect. Long thin skinny face; strong long beaks, long blue legs; long ear-lobe, perfectly white.

Both cocks and hens have in common a rich metallic lustre on the plumage. They should also be rather leggy than otherwise.

No bird pays better for care in preparing for exhibition than this docs. No other bird presents such a contrast as the white face, red comb, and black feather. The white face is indispensable to success, and is perhaps the most important point in judging; but it must be borne in mind that not any excellence in this respect can palliate a drooping comb in the cock, or an upright one in the hen. Many birds have a much better face on one side than the other. No amount of white on one side will counterbalance red on the other.

red on the other.
FOLISH FOWLS.

WHITE CRESTED BLACK.
COCKS AND HEXA.—Black lustrous plumage;
top-knots white as may be without trimming;
leaden blue legs; prominent breasts; very full tails, and straight even backs. The cock and hens must have gilla, but the cock must have no comb nor even spikes in front.

Silven Spanglen

Cocks.—Ample top-knot, well filled with colored feathers; and not lying flat on the head.—
Well spangled breast, wing laced and berred. Well spangied breast, wing laced and barred. Tail white, every feather being tipped with black. Hackle and saddle black and white clouded. No comb, gills, or spikes.

HENR—Full, firm top-knot, made up of laced feathers, and growing upward and close. Mixed hackle. Body accurately spangled all over.—Wing laced and barred. White tail, tipped with black. No gills. Full breast and round body. Biue legs.

GOLDEN.

GOLDEN.

GOLDEN.

COCKS.—As above in all points, save that the tall, instead of being tipped with black, is of that color throughout, black in the coverts, and the tall centre, but having rich orange shades on such side.

each side.

HENA—As above, except as regards the tall and the top-knot; the former being black, or nearly so; while the top-knot should be composed of black feathers, edged with yellow.

There is in most Polands a tendency to deformity, but especially in the blacks. It is always a disqualification at a show.

COCHIN-CHINA FOWLS. COCHIN-CHINA FOWLS.

Cocks.—Upright comb, with correct and numerous serrations; ample hackle and saddle; gradual chart from the head to the centre of the back, and rising thence to the tail. Very fluffy thighs and hinder-parts; bright eye, long deafear and wattle. Very little tail, and made of numerous small curly feathers, that seem to roll over the back, rather than to stand up as in oth-birds. Legs feathered to the toes; wings tightly clipped up; upright carriage; bright, good eye.

HENR—Sharp, intelligent head, combs small, scrupulously straight, full of well defined serrations. Thighs and hinder-parts cottrely hidden in soft, silky fluff; short legs, feathered to the toe; short thick looking necks; heads carried rather forward than upright. There should be a gradual rise of feathers from the middle of the back to the tip of the tail, which should end in a round point.

Lemox and Buff.

Lemon and Buff.
Cocks and Pullets are both alike in color. GROUSE AND PARTRIDGE.

GROUSE AND PARTRIDGE.

COCKA.—Black breasis; backle and saddle black, shaded on red or very rich gold; tail black; legs yellow, and well feathered.

HENS.—Plumage brown all over, with as juite yellow tinge as can be, and the feathers marked or pencilled as in the Grouse. Feathered yellow legs.

Points same as in others, but well-feathered yellow legs indispensable, and vulture hocks not desirable.

not desirable.

GAME.

Cocks.—Bright red comb, waitle, and face; strong stout beak, slightly curved; round hard body, tapering to the tail; short round hard thigh; stout leg; flat foot; spur low, near to the foot. Scanty plumage, but very hard. The bird should handle whole, as if clothed with one feather; the tail scanty, and carried rather drooping than otherwise. The head should be moderate in size, but fine in slape, sharp a I snake like; very bright eye. The whole expression fearless, but more dignified than saucy.

Heys.—Sharn intelligent head, strong slightly son fearles, out more digitized than saucy.

HENS.—Sharp intelligent head, strong slightly curved beak; laper leg; small comb, with numerous remations, quite straight and upright; prominent breast; very hard feather. Body tapering to the tall, but round in liand. Straight breast; gay and bold carriage; flat foot and closs tail.

BLACE-BREASTED REDS. BLACK-BREASTED REDS.

COCES.—Deep, rich red and maroon plümage;
black breast, thighs, and tail.

HESS.—Brown body, each feather-shaft being light; light breast and hackle.

DUCK-WINGED.

COCKA-Very light straw backle and saddle; black-tail, breast, and thigh; copper saddle, and duck-wing; with the Mallard color.

HENS.-Nutneg body; silver backles; and salmon breast.

There is also the Silver Duck-wing. All red, or copper or salmon, is a mistake, in these birds.

POR SALE BY

PILES.

Bed and White. Ginger and White. The cock most distinctly marked, as the saddle and wing should be heavily splashed with the darkest single of the color. The tail should be mixed, all the rest of the body should be white. The hens must have less white. Mearly the whole of the plumage should be covered with a rich deep cream color, and it is especially desirable white should not predominate in any part of the body.

white should not preutinize the body.

There is another File, formerly common in Worcestershire, colored like the preceding, with this difference, that black feathers are intermixed almost artistically with the other plumage.

tail, light backle and saddle.

HENR.—Blate color, ash, cobweb speckled with brown or black. Any color but black and white Such as these are invariably the heaviest and largest birds.

COCKS.—Entirely black breast and tail, white hackle and saddle. No speck of white on the black, no buff, brown or red on the white, can be allowed.

HENR.—Hackles of alternate black and white stripes, the latter predominating. Body of light gray, the shaft of each feather being white. Robin breast.

COCKS.—Enterly black treast and tail, white stripes, the latter predominating. Body of light gray, the shaft of each feather being white. Robin breast.

SPECKLED DORKINGS.

COCKS.—Breast black, red, or either color spotted with white. Thil black, or black and white; hackle and saddle red or spotted.

HENR.—Hackle dark, deep brown, or striped with gold. Body chocolate or light brown, spot-accurately laced.

HENR Double comb of moderate size; plumage correctly laced throughout; clear tail, having only the black tip; blue legs; round body; full breast; proud carriage.

GAME BANTAMS.

These must be colored like Game Fowls.—
They must also resemble them in shape, carriage and hardness of feather. The cock must not droop his wings. He must carry them up close, and must have the bold carriage of the Game, instead of the strutting gait of the Bantam. The hen must exchange the loose feather, round head, and quiet, marron-like air of the Bantam hen, for the close feather, hard body, snake head, serrated comb and semewhat fierce look of the Game hen.

In black Bantams, all should have clear, amall white deaf-ears, small red double combs; and the cocks should have very long sickle feathers. In both Black and White, single and double combs are equally admissible; in both also the cocks must have streaming tails. The white ideaf-car is not so important in the white as in black.

MALAY.

Cocks.—Strong beak; pearl eye, naked throat; hard skinny face; round, hard, and scantily-feathered body firm, flattened comb; crop, point of breast and wing, red and naked. Large head, sloping body, and drooping tail; clean legs.

Hena.—Same points as in the cock, except that the tail is carried more upright, but not as in other found and its more realty. A choice specimen standing erect should pre-sent three curves, one from the head to the shoulders, one from the shoulder to the tail, and one from the root to the extremity of it.

BRAHMA POOTRA. BRAHMA POOTRA.

DARK.

COCKS.—Pea or single comb; the former preferred. The breast black, speckled with white; highs black; hackle and saddle light; tail black, and spreading at the end like that of a black cock. Yellow legs, very well feathered, deep breast; very full hackle.

HERN.—Bodies delicately pencilled all over.

Silver hackle; deep body; yellow legs, well feathered; pea or single comb.

LIGHT.

Cocks and hens alike, but the cock frequently less marked than the hen. Entirely white plumage, save the tail and flight feathers, which are black, and the hackle, which is black striped. These should also have well-feathered vellow legs, and either pea or single combs. The under-feathers of these birds should be dark.

CREVECEUR.

Cocks.—Square, thick and heavy body; short blue legs; top knot and beard; long wattles; iwo distinct spirals in front; sometimes uneven, but always erect. Very large open nostrils. Entirely black plumage desirable, but seldom to be had. It is a great point to have it black.

Hens.—Square, thick and heavy body; short blue legs; top knot and beard. A chicken of the year should be entirely black. It is difficult to continue this plumage to the adult state, but it is very desirable. The top-knot should be large, and the beard should be targer at the bottom than at the top. Some birds of this breed show many colored feathers—it is a disadvantage in competition. CREVECŒUR.

LA FLECHE COCKA—Tall, up-standing, long-legged bird.
Two small spikes in lieu of comb, placed on the head immediately above the eyes. One small spike growing above and between the nostrils. Very long gills. Entire black and close hard plumage; ample tail, carried upright; body slanting to a point towards the tail, like the COCKS.—Short legs; round body; five claws on each foot; long gills and beard, large head, partly colored white, black and straw color; dark legs; small top-knot.

HENS.—Nearly as large as the cock; round, heavy body; five claws on each foot. Large head; small top-knot, falling back, and like a lark's crest.—S. M. S., in Wilker's Epirit.
