THE GARDEN.

The following beautiful reference to "The Garden," is from the pollshed and erudite pen of Elihu Burritt, the "learned blacksmith," and we reprint it on account of the truthful lesson which it imparts, and the influence it may exercise upon those who possess these heart-spots in the domestic economy:

which it imparts, and the influence it may exercise upon those who possess these heart-spots in the domestic economy:

"The garden is a bound volume of agricultural life, written in poetry. In it the farmer and his family set the great industrious plow, spade and hoe in rhyme. Every flower or fruit-bearing tree is a green syllable after the graceful type and course of Eden. Every bed of flowers is an acrostic to nature, written in the illustrated capitals of her own alphabet. Every bed of beets, celery or savory roots or bulbs, is a page of blank verse, full of belles lettres of agriculture. The farmer may be seen in his garden. It contains the synopsis of his character in letters that may be read across the road. The barometer hung up by his door will indicate certain facts about the weather, but the garden, lying on the sunny side of the house, marks with greater precission the degree of mind and heart culture which he has reached. It will embody and reflect his tastes, the bent and blas of his perceptions of grace and beauty. In it he holds up the mirror of his inner life to all who pass; and with an onservant eye they may see all the features of his intellectual being in it. In that choice road of earth he records his progress in mental cultivation and professional experience. In it he marks by intelligent signs, his scientific and successful ceremonies in the corn-field. In it you may see the germs of his reading, and you can almost, tell the number and nature of his books. In it he will reproduce the seed thought he has culled from the printed pages of his library. In it he will reproduce the seed thought he has culled from the printed pages of his library. In it he will reproduce the seed thought he has culled from the printed pages of his library. ### From the Country Gentleman. Negligence in Agriculture.

I think a subject of this kind a very proper one for your journal, and by pointing out some of the respects in which so many of our farmers are negligent, may prove of more or less use to a large class of them. I believe farmers lose more by neglect than by bad cultivation. Let me notice some of the most common. Whenever I hear a man complain that his land is overrun with thistles, orgog daisy, wild carrot, mustard, narrow leaf dock, &c., &c., I at once say to him that there was a time when he might have destroyed all of these norious weeds by a few minutes labor, but your neglecting them and passing them by has proved the old saying that a stitch in time saves nine. When he first saw that villainous plant on his land, there was but one or a dozen of them, and he might have destroyed them with his hand or hoe or a weed hook, in a few minutes; but he had passed on, thinking a few of no consequence, until at last he found their name was legion. The next year their seeds are scattered by the wind over his neat and tidy neighbor's fields, as well as his own, when once he might by a few minutes excition have destroyed the whole army. His more tidy neighbor, on whose land a victious weed was never allowed to grow, is out with his weed-hook, trying to extract the weeds that have grown from seed blown from your land, and wonders whence they came. Such a farmer would do justice to himself and neighbor, if in his walks over his fields he should carry in his hand a wed-hook, which is simply and easily constructed by any one, taking a staff the size and shape of a hoe handle and putting an old chisel in one end and a hook with two or three prongs in the other, which will enable you to extract all kinds of noxious weeds; and never allow one noxious weed to grow a moment after your discovery of it, and not do as many of our negligent farmers do when they see a weed of this kind, say—"I will destroy it on my way home, or when I get more time." This is not the way to do. I know this by experience. If you neglect to destroy the complain of their land being thin and worn out, and needing more manure; farm not large enough to keep more stock; can't afford to buy manure, &c., &c. I doubt whether farmers can afford to pay 75 cents to $1,00 per load for manure, and haul it two miles, or even one mile. You can obtain the article for just half that, and have it all on your farm. I know of no farm where stock is kept, but that will make, (if properly cared for.) as much manure as the farmer will require. But as a general thing it is thought of little consequence, and a little pile is thrown out of this window and another out of that, and a heap here and a heap there, perhaps under the eaves or on a knoll, and stock allowed to range where they please.

eaves or on a knoll, and stock anower to range where they please.

Farmers be particular in draining your land. A thorough system of draining is one of the es-sentials of good farming. You less much valu-able time and land by allowing water to stand on your land. Draining thoroughly lengthems the season for crops. Moisture is absolutely ne-cessary for the growth of plants, but an excess is intrivious.

Cessary for the grown of the subject before me opens such a vast field for thought, I know not where to stop; but for fear I have already taxed your journal too much I will bring my remarks to a close.

Basement Stables. Mesera Editors:—I noticed in your issue of the 2nd inst., an inquiry in relation to the healthiness of basement stables. I will give my experience with such stables. I have a barn seventy feet in front, thirty deep, fronting the south; three sides of the basement is under ground; boarded in front; a row of stables across the west end for horses; a row across the south side for cows, and a row along the south side for cows, the remainder of the basement is used for roots, ground feed, straw, &c. I have generally kept from fourteen to sixteen head of cattle in this basement, with from three to four horses, for twenty years past. The horses are kept up the year around; the cows I generally turn out in the yard in front of the barn when the days are pleasant, but when the weather is unpleasant they are kept in their stables. I have water in the yard, so there is no need of their going out from the time that foddering commences in the fall, until they are turned out to grass in the spring.

The stables are regularly cleaned every day, and well littered. A more healthy lot of stock I have never known for I have need these stables. I certainly like basement stables—they are warm and countertable in winter, and cool and pleasant in Foundry opposite the Post Office.

HAVING purchased the Foundry and stock on mand of the Cartin, is prepared to manufacture.

Plows and other Castings, such as are generally found in a Country Shop at short motes and outstrable in winter, and cool and pleasant in Foundry opposite the Post Office.

I have a meadow near the barn, where I commence mowing for my horses the early part of fifth month. I like stabling horses through the summer, they are handy when wanted no trouble if had to catch, do not trample and destroy the grass, do not frolic and tear off their shoes, and the same amount of land will keep double the number or more than if turned out upon it. I have frequently thought of trying the soling system with cows, but have not got at it yet.
