The President stated that the next business before Convention was the nomination of candida

That stylet economy and frugality in the expenditure of public money, and a rigid accountactly on the part of public officers, are cardinal reciples of the Republican party; and that, therefore, we view with extreme distraint, and that, therefore, we view with extreme distraint, all extraordinary legislation, such as the conferring of large sovering powers on irresponsible bodies of men who are not even required to act under the restraints of an official cath, as being contrary to what has here-tofore been considered as the settled policy of our sate; subversive of good Government, and the aptite of the people; a breaking down of all the rarriers to official corruption, and tending fest towards anarchy and confusion; and as such, justly deserving our unqualified condemnation.

The resolutions were considered separately—a notion to lay them on the table having first failed—at the first and fourth were passed, and the second and third not passed.

Hints about County Faira. We hope the managers of county and other fairs, are awake to the fact that their meetings are to be unusually interesting this year. Our farmer soldiers are home again. They are taking hold, many of them, of the accustomed work of the farm with new zest, and their interest to see their companiors in arms—and those from whom they have been separated in different army corps and divisions, fighting for the same flag, will lead them to seek all such gatherings. Every body who loves the soldiers will rejoice to be present at these reunions, where the old campsigns will be fought over again, and anecdotes of those that have fallen will keep them alive in our grateful memories. Doubtless also there will be a division of the exhibition halls set apart for relies from the South, and from the battle fields. This is one feature, which will "draw." Besides, we all want to see those southern horses brought home by the officers—those thin necked, smooth limbed, light, lithacreatures, that will jump a five-rail fence, or a 12-foot ditch as easily apparently as they will walk across a meadow. Then too, this has been a very prosperous season. Vegetables and fruits, not cut off early by insects, have done their best to help make a good show, and the molst season has favored a rapid growth and large size. The great interest in fine wool sheep has chiefly arisen since the last show, and this is another subject of especial attractiveness. The great dayance in wages of farm help awakena farmers more than ever to the necesity of knowing how machinery may do the work for less, and how improved implements will lighten labor, save time, and add to comfort.

Many secteties are preparing to hold fairs this season, which have not done so for several years, and it is no less true that a great many people will this year go to the fairs, who have not seen an agricultural and industrial exhibition for a long time. The managers have duttes to their crahibitors and visitors, and those who attend the show to see what the

they can, have duties to themselves and their fam-

HOW A CATTLE SHOW AND PAIR SHOULD BE COX-

The list of premiums and order of exercises should be published and distributed free, or in some form easily accessible to all. The committees and judges should be instructed to act promptly, and if they do not, a new committee should be at once appointed who will act. Some indication of awards should be placed upon prize animals and articles as soon as possible, after they are made, to give additional interest and instruction to visitors. It is most important that:

No unworthy article should receive any prize.

No prize should ever be given to "encourage" an unworthy exhibitor, who has taken pains to bring an inferior article, and will be disappointed if he does not get a prize. DUCTED.

No prize thould ever be given to "propitiate" an influential patron, who will be offended if his articles are not noticed.

No prize should ever be withheld from an exhibitor, because he is taking too many prizes. No matter if one man, sweeps every prize offered by the society (unless there is some rule to the contary.) In every respect the good taith of the society should be con sidered sacred, and in the keeping of every committee man.

respect the good faith of the society should be considered sacred, and in the keeping of every committee man.

The executive committee of a society should be constantly on the lookout, to secure honest reports; and should a judge be known to violate rules, in passing judgment on his own article, and warping the judgment on his own article, and warping the judgment of his associates, or allowing himself to be biased, his place should be at once supplied by another person. This committee should spend part of each day in listening to complaints, and doing what they can to right wrongs.

The animals and articles artibilited, should not becrowded, but well exposed to view and careful inspection. And exhibitors should have the fullest opportunity consistent with the right of others to "xplsin and show off their articles. If an exhibitor cannot be present in person, or by an agent, it is most imopriant, not only for himself, but for the gratification of visitors, for him to have cards, or circulars, to be taken by every one. In cases where the show lasts several days, convocations in the evenings for all interested in participating in an agricultural, or pomological talk, will be found quite well astended. These meetings are usually very interesting, lithey are only made free and conversational, and some common sense man has charge of them. They must be seen to, and seen through, by some officer of the society. The matual admiration office run into, may be healthfully varied by introducing subjects which will call upactive, but not will be considered the society. And if it can be done without wasting half a day, it is quite worth while to see a well contested trotting match; but on the whole, the exercises of the trotting course, however valuable their results in improving horses, (which we do not believe in are the least instructive and most time-wastful part of the whole show.—American Agriculturist.
