ed their decay? Who ever heard of a meadow running out which had been previously fully sub-soiled?—Working Farmer.

IMPROVEMENT.

This is a word of very comprehensive signification, and when used in reference to agricultural matters, ought always to be understood in its broadest sense.

Some farmers still have a very comradely spirit; and under such a calling and are always anxious to acquire instruction and knowledge; and while others manifest the most liberal spirit; openly decry every movement which does not coincide precisely with their own views, or which is not strictly consonant with the theories and traditional usages of their predecessors of a darker age.

It is of little avail to like Moses or Rembrandt in any of the things which they make a poor swap, at least, and will find in the end that they have exchanged for something less valuable than tinsel spectacles, in shagreen cases, that which is virtually of intrinsic value, and sold with.—Maine Cultivator.

The above is a fair description of the two classes of farmers named. Whenever we hear a stupid ambitious, self-concocted braggart, railing against improvements in agriculture, or are ever ready to exclaim, "I have done better than you, and I have done it without the aid of any of those damned improvements,"

Excess of rains may pass down, while in the drought the roots may go down to a lower point to find moisture, and thus the whole plant is sustained. During the drought of 1848, we had a fine opportunity of observing this fact. While the corn crops on soil not sub-soiled, were literally lost, the same crops on the sub-soiled pasturized with exceeding vigor.

Less manure will produce equal results on sub-soiled land. This ammonia and carbonic acid gas, is so much more readily retained for the use of plants in deeply disintegrated soils; whereas in shallow soils these gases, so called, at night with the dew, are parted with by the effects of a morning sun.

Why do we disturb the surface of the ground between the hills of corn and potatoes, and find that we benefit our crops thereby? Does such treatment increase the fertilizing materials we have previously put in the ground, or does it open the surface for the admission of air to the roots? If the latter, must not the same facts apply to the lower as well as the upper roots?

Practically, we have settled these questions to our satisfaction, as well as to that of our neighbors. Many who at first were unbelievers in the use of the sub-soil plow, which admits of the roots of the corn, have only increased the attachment of the faithful wife to her lover, who declared that "she would have him any how, whether he had one or two." The unlucky swain will ever be adjusted in our court of justice, and his operation will probably learn, that cutting off ears is a more dangerous and a poorer way to cut an ear than to cut it with a sub-soil plow.

Special Court. Mr. Justice has ruled that the law of the State, which requires that the roots of the corn should be kept in contact with the soil, is a just and reasonable one, and that the law is not unconstitutional.
