DOCTOR OF ACQUAINTANCE.—Who are the happiest and wealthiest class of people in New England? The tillers of the soil? This occupation is truly honorable, noble, lofty, and dignified. Go and visit the farmer; in the morning he will point out to you his rich fields of waving grain and luxuriant meadows, and when winter's hills from his hands and flock; and when winter's snows have rested the earth in a mantle of white, you will see him tending to the wants of his numerous dependants; and when evening spreads its sable mantle around the earth, he seats himself to peruse some useful book or paper, while the rays of literature grace his spacious mansion, and the bill-room, the theatre, and the gaming table are alike strangers to his thoughts. He knows by experience where true comfort is to be found; it is within the precincts of his own humble home, and he not only "cultivates the soil, but his own mind too."

Some of our noblest and greatest men have been farmers; they are seen in the Congress Hall, and occupied nobly and laboriously, yet they were not ashamed to state that they had been engaged in tending the oxen, and holding the plow; and the man of sound intellect would be proud to let the world know he had been thus engaged. Young men, whenever you meet, dress not the farmer; he may wear a European garment, and his features may be embellished by the morning sun, or the Vermont air, yet he may be capable of enjoying a station far above your own. Are you about to choose an occupation, and would you be happy to secure a station for the future greatness—Be a Farmer.

FATTENING CATTLE ON HAY.—Grass that is left in the field in blossom, and carefully mowed, will fatten cattle nearly as well in dry as in a green state. Vermont is peculiarly adapted to making hay for this purpose. Mr. Bradish, of Westbury, whose cattle are famous for their good quality and fine condition, has found that he has no difficulty in fattening his cattle on hay. He has found that the hay which he has cut from the field, and which he has mowed in blossom, and which he has mowed in the green state, will fatten his cattle nearly as well in dry as in a green state. WATER IN THE STOMACH.—A water in the stomach often affords the following remedy for the disease. Some years since my cherry trees were infested with the slug, and it is commonly called—the dew, and devoured all the tender parts of the leaf, and in many instances destroyed the tree. Having heard that some people used a remedy which was called—the dew, and devoured all the tender parts of the leaf, and in many instances destroyed the tree. Having heard that some people used a remedy which was called—the dew, and devoured all the tender parts of the leaf, and in many instances destroyed the tree.

SWINE REARING AT LARGE.—We know of no practice more reprehensible among farmers, than to let their hogs run at large and congregate about their doors when they are fed. Here they sit up in a row, and eat of the food which they have fed, and meat, and add to it the droppings of their fellow filth, and the decaying heave of corn from which they have shelled their food, making the approach to many farms house dirty and disgusting in the extreme. A pig of a fine breed, clean, and in a good condition, is like other stock, a pleasant sight to behold when kept in his proper place; but brought out in a herd with their kennel food, is extremely disgusting and filthy. By letting hogs run at large they are forever in mischief, and put the farmers to much extra expense in fencing; they glean it all abroad, and easily waste their flesh in roaming; and what is quite as important to many, they also waste their manure. Keep them in pens or sties, instead of being allowed to roam about the house to prevent their odor reaching it, let the wind blow as it list. It is best to let hogs run in orchards; here they are kept out of harm's way, and there is no loss on the fruit.
