ted to the jail yard by passes from the Sheriff, beside the officers in attendance.

The whole number of constables and police officers on duty was 125; 25 constables and 25 police officers were stationed at several points on the inside, and 75 were on the ground outside the prison.

Rev. Dr. Putnam arrived at the jail about 7½ o'clock and immediately proceeded to the prisoner's cell, where devotional exercises were held.

Dr. Webster was in the further corner cell on the right, on the lower floor of the south-eastern building.

At 9½ o'clock Sheriff Eveleth summoned to the rear office of the jail those gentlemen who he had requested to be present as witnesses, and there read to them the order of, what was to follow, together with the duties devolving upon his several Deputies.

Among the names of the witnesses were the following: B F Edmunds, Philip Greeley, I H Wright, Isaac Adams, J Put Bradlee, Robert Cowdin, Peter T. Homer, Wm Sahouler, Henry H. Hooper, Thomas Gill, John T. Heard, John Beals, William Barnicat, J. T. Crocker, Joseph B. Smith, Osman Brewster, Benj. Adams, B. Perley Poore, Newell A. Thompson.

The Sheriff stated to the Gentlemen present that they had assembled by invitation from him as lawful witnesses of the execution of John White Webster for the crime of murder, for which he had been convicted and sentenced. He detailed to them the order in which the proceedings would take place, and expressed his hope that the utmost quiet and good order be maintained, as consistent with the solemnity of the occasion. He hoped that he should not hear any loud talking, not a voice during the progress of the proceedings.

From the Jail office, the Sheriff, supported by Deputies Rugg and Freeman, proceeded to the prisoner's cell, followed by the witnesses and other deputies, where an impressive and eloquent prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Putnam, he being the only assisting clergyman present. No other services were held. The prisoner, during prayer, was in his cell in a kneeling position.

After prayer we had an opportunity to see Professor Webster in his cell. We had not looked upon him since the day he was sentenced. He was greatly altered for the better. We never saw a more healthy looking man than he appeared to be. His countenance was much more pleasant than when he was upon his trial.

Shortly after, at 9 2-5 o'clock, High Sheriff Eveleth, attended by Deputies Coburn, Freeman and Rugg, Mr. Andrews, the Jailor, Mr. Holmes, the Turnkey, and the prisoner, accompanied by Dr. Putnam, came out and ascended the platform of the scaffold, the prisoner taking his position upon the drop.

Dr. Putnam immediately entered into earnest conversation with Prof. Webster, and continued to do so through the reading of the Governor's warrant by the Sheriff, and until Jailer Andrews stepped forward to pinion the legs of the prisoner, when the Doctor shook Rev Mr. Putnam affectionately by the hand, bade him a final earthly farewell, expressing at the same time the hope that they should meet again in Heaven.

The prisoner was dressed in a black suit, apparently the same clothes that he wore during the trial.

Deputy Sheriffs Rugg and Freeman, adjusted the rope at just 25 minutes to ten o'clock.

Before the cap was drawn over his eyes he shook hands with jailer Andrews, Mr. Holmes, and last with the Sheriff and thanked them for their kind treatment to him.

Sheriff Eveleth then said

"In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and in accordance with the Warrant of the Chief Executive, I now, before these witnesses, proceed to execute the sentence of the law upon John W. Webster, convicted at the March term of the Supreme Judicial Court, of the murder of Dr. George Parkman."

This said, the Sheriff placed his foot upon the fatal spring, and in an instant more the victim was launched into eternity. He gave several struggles and all was over.

After remaining some thirty minutes, Drs. Stedman and Clark pronounced the body lifeless, when it was lowered into a black coffin, and conveyed back into the same cell, where, in the full vigor of manhood, it had but a short period before trod. It will be delivered to the family this afternoon, and without much ceremony be buried at Mt. Auburn, in the family vault.—Thus far we have no knowledge that there exists any other confession than the bare statement which he has repeatedly made, that the law of Capital Punishment was right, and that he was justly a subject of it. —Tribune.

Arrival of Jenny Lind.

The Atlantic came in sight of Sandy Hook, about one o'clock Sunday afternoon; on passing the Narrows she fired a salute, which was soon after returned by some Swedish vessels lying at Quarantine, and decorated with Swedish emblems. Coming up the bay, Jenny Lind and her party took a station on the starboard wheel-house, that they might the better observe the approaches to the city. When the vessel neared her berth at Canal street, the wharf, the houses, the ships, and the lamp posts were covered with human beings, anxious to get a sight of the great object of interest. The Atlantic ran past the pier as she came up, turned and went down stream some distance, and then glided slowly into her place. Some little time elasped before she could be made fast and the gangway adjusted. The immense crowd was kept away from the vessel by the gate across the pier. Mr. Barnum's carriage was in readiness at the foot of the gangway, he having himself joined the steamer at Quarantine, where he was introduced to the songstress. Just inside the gate, a number of triumphal arches of evergreens and flowers had been erected. The first arch, fronting the water, bore the inscription: "Welcome to Jenny Lind;" after which came another, with the American Eagle in the centre, and the words, "Jenny Lind, welcome to America," in large letters around the span. The landing-place, from the steamer to the gates, was overhung with the American flag, with the flags of various nations tastefully disposed on either side.

As soon as Capt. West had conducted Miss Lind to the gangway, the rush commenced. Miss Ahmansen, (companion and cousin,) with Messrs. Benedict and Belleti, followed, and all four took their seats in the carriage, clinging to the wheels and crowding about the windows, cheering all the while with an enthusiasm not often surpassed. The multitude outside began to press against the gates, which were unbolted in all haste to prevent being forced in, when they tumbled over each other, and came near producing a horrible destruction of life. Jenny Lind looked remarkably well, and although not possessed of any very great personal beauty, her features are very regular, and she appears very pre possessing in her manner. She wore a pale blue silk bonnet, covered with lace, a slate colored dress, trimmed with gimp, and and a brown broad-cloth cloak, faced with velvet.

It was with difficulty that the carriage was got to move, so dense was the crowd about it, but it finally got under way, and drove rapidly toward the Irving House.—There the excitement was quite as great as it had been in the streets. A magnificent suite of apartments had been prepared for her, but she was hardly allowed to rest in them, as she was obliged every few moments to go to the window to acknowledge the cheering of the crowd Large numbers of people, chiefly personal acquaintances, called upon her in the course of the evening About Midnight the New York Musical Fund Society gave her a serenade, when, it was estimated, some twenty thousand people surrounded the hotel She appeared repeatedly at the window, in answer to cheers. After the serenade, a committee of the society, headed by Mr H. C. Watson, waited upon her, and tendered her a hearty welcome to the United States, to which she replied in a few brief and broken words. She was then allowed to retire to rest, which we have no doubt she greatly needed.

Movements.—Miss Lind will go to spend a few days at the residence, at Fishkill, of G. G. Howland, to whom she had letters from the American Minister. After that she will visit Mr. Barnum's, at Bridgeport, The Tripler Hall, where Jenny Lind is to sing, will not be finished until the 1st of October It is very spacious and will easily accommodate four thousand persons.—By an ingenious arrangement of machinery, all the chairs and benches can be hoisted in a few moments to the ceiling, and the hall cleared for dancing The proprietor, Mr. Tripler, intends to expend five thousand dollars in decorating the interior.—*N. The Executive Committee would have great pleasure in extending the premium list still further were it in their power, but as it has been enlarged beyond all former precedent, it will depend on the support the society may receive for a further extension next year.—Applicants for premiums on Winter and Spring Wheat are requested to give the mode of cultivation prior to fall. The land to be measured with chain and compass and the survey or to give a certificate of his survey. The applicant and one other person who assisted in harvesting and measuring the crop are required to make affidavit or affirmation to the quantity of grain raised. Premium to be awarded in January. The application with the proofs to be forwarded to the Secretary by the 10th of January, 1851.—The Society does not intend to offer premiums for crops raised by unusual manuring, as they are intended only for crops raised upon the farm in its regular cultivation.

Persons presenting agricultural implements or articles of mechanical ingenuity or utility, are requested to furnish the Secretary with a description of the article, the price and place where it can be had, as it is intended to publish a descriptive list of the articles exhibited at the Show for the benefit of manufacturers and purchasers.—Judges are expressly requested not to give encouragement to over-fed animals—the object being to have superior stock for breeding. Applicants for premiums on Milch Cows must state the quantity of milk produced from the cow from the 10th to the 20th of June and from the 1st to the 10th of September; also, the butter made during each period of ten days. The cows to be kept on grass, and the butter made to be exhibited, with the whole statement properly verified. Should there be any individuals not desirous of competing for this premium, but who have superior cows, the committee would be glad to receive any statements respecting what they have done, in order to show the capability of the county.

The foregoing premiums, except those on grain, will be paid by the Treasurer on the report of the Judges being declared by the President.

The Committee will state that for the accommodation of persons driving cattle from a distance too long to allow for driving in on the morning of the Fair, they have arranged that cattle or sheep coming from the East will be kept over night by Mr. E. G. Babcock or at the farm of Hon. Wm. Jessup. Those coming on the New Milford road, at the farm of Drinker & Salisbury near Jos. Williams. Those from the south can stop at the farm of Mr. Azur Lathrop, lately Judge Lathrop's, three miles from Montrose. Those from the north and west will be accommodated at the farm of Daniel Searle. No charge will be made.

In addition, fodder will be provided for stock on the day of the Fair.
