Remarks on the Small Note Law.

BY WM. HOUSE OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON.

To the Editor of the Pittsburg Morning Post:

SIR:—It is said while the law prhibiting the circulation of small notes is generally observed in Philadelphia, it is generally disregarded in Pittsburg

This ought not to be. The law ought to be universally obeyed, if not for worth, for conscience sake." If each individual yields obedience to the laws only so far as he conceives such obedience conducive to his own profit or his own interest, there is at once an end to all orderly government.

Private cupidity, it must be admitted, affords strong inducements to many to break the law, but private cupidity, is not the rule of right.

"I can see no difference," says one man, "between a paper dollar and a silver dollar, one will go as far in the market as the other." Well, neighbors, as a mere circulating medium, there is not much difference between them, so long as the paper is at par with specie.

But it sometimes happens that paper is at par at 8 o'clock in the morning, and at noon is at 20 per cent discount.

But, money is not a mere circulating medium It is also a standard of value and the commodity of contracts. Have you studied it in these re-pects? If you have not, you are not qualified to judge of the reasons that induced the Legislature to pass the act prohibiting the circulation of small notes.

You think it will drive trade from Pittsburg. Herein you are mistaken The trade between different parts of the country does not consist in an interchange of bank notes or specie, but an interchange of the products of industry. A change in the medium from paper to specie, will not, in the least, diminish the amount of this trade

You think the law will make money scarce. Herein, also, you are mistaken — For every paper dollar it drives out of circulation, it will supply a specie dollar — There is but one way which an industrious community can be deprived of its just share of gold and silver in dum; and that is by the use of paper. There is but one way in which this gold and silver can be brought back, and that is by driving the paper money out of circulation.

The law of 1828 acted like a charm — The small notes of distant banks disappeared, and silver took their place. Prognostications were made then, as they are made now, of scarcity of money and loss of trade, but not one of these prognostications were verified

Similar laws passed by Virginia, Maryland and other States, produced a similar effect. Wherever such laws passed, small notes disappeared, and silver took their place.

It is very true that Pennsylvania does not now occupy the high moral attitude that she did in 18— she has now sanctioned the issue of "relief notes," and when the receipts of one species of small notes is authorized by law, it may be difficult to drive other species of small notes out of circulation. Still the difficulty is not insuperable, and if our paper editors and others who write for newspapers, will only do their duty in showing the true character of the law, it will produce as beneficial effects as did the law of 1828

Some of the working men of Philadelphia, (in which city I then resided) estimate the advantage they gained by the passage of the law of 1828, to be equal to ten per cent. on their wages. Before that law was passed they were paid their wages in the small bank notes of the banks of other States, and could make their purchases at the stores only at which such notes were received After the law was passed they were paid their wages in silver, and could go to all the stores and purchase wherever they found goods the cheapest.

Before that law was passed, many of those who employed working men, refused to take the money they received in current business, and exchange it at the brokers for depreciated paper, where with they paid their journeymen and their laborers

The poor working man ought not to be paid in a medium, which, though now at par with silver and gold, may, it be keeps it a week or a month, lose one half of its value. Bank notes may be very convenient in large commercial transactions, but the wages of labor, in every country, ought to be paid in gold and silver

Between bank notes of small and large denominations, there are distinctions which ought to be generally known Bank notes of the denomination of less than five dollars take the place of silver. Bank notes of the denomination of from five to twenty dollars, take the place of gold Bank notes of the denomination of fifty dollars and upwards take the place of private bills of exchange. The higher you raise the denomination of bank notes, the less objectionable do they become. Bank notes of large denominations seldom pass into the hands of any except those who are qualified to judge of the ability of the banks that issue them. Bank notes of large denominations, moreover, perform but a small circuit, before they return to the banks that issue them, and thus have their value tested.—While bank notes of small denominations may remain out for months and years, and the insolvency of the bank that issues them fail to be made known, only because the notes are never presented for payment.

It will be chiefly the working men of Pennsylvania that will be benefitted by causing silver to take the place of small notes. But the benefit will not confined to them. The banks themselves will derive no small advantage from the measure. Let a panic occur when the small channels are filled with paper, and a demand for specie will arise, which may drain the banks of much treasure. But fill now the smaller channels of circulation with specie, and the banks will be placed in a relatively safe position.

It is an excellent sight to see a considerable current of gold and silver flowing daily into the vaults of the banks, and another current of equal amount flowing out It shows that the due relations between the extremes of wholesale and retail trade are properly maintained. Such a current and counter-current shall we have in Pennsylvania if the law for suppressing small notes is rightly enforced.

Washington City, Aug. 27, 1850.

NEW COUNTERFEITS.—A $20 note on the West Branch Bank, Williamsport, Pa. has made its appearance recently. It is described as bearing a suspension Bridge on the left end, and Neptune and the sea Nymphs on the right—Engraved by Rawdon, Wright and Hatch.

The Vignette of the counterfeit $5 notes on the York Bank, York, Pa, is a female in a sitting posture

One thrust all our deeds of virtue,
All our goodness could not save—
And the dust has been heaped o'er the head
Of the lonely mine grave

Here nothing causes a stir,
What the fame knows about,
That the sweetest voice sings over
Than the clasp of human love
