and it has been discharged in conformity to fundamental law; and the enactments of has adopted are entitled to the support of the whole nation.

5. That our country men are a law-abiding people. The delegate to chosen representative in the Congress of the United States, powers of legislation limited by the Constitution; and they repose confidence in the acts of a majority coumen-surate with the character of a Republican government. When individuals array themselves against the execution of laws thus enacted, and by so doing trample upon the rights of the whole people, they are guilty of at least moral treason; and it is the solemn duty of the people, to rise up in their majesty, and by carrying out the regular proceedings of their representatives, to vindicate the supremacy and the sovereignty of the law.

6. That so much of the act of Assembly of Pennsylvania as forbids any officers of the Commonwealth from giving effect to any act of Congress respecting persons escaping from service in other States, and provides penalties for taking cognizance of jurisdiction of the case of any such fugitive ought to be at the earliest possible moment repealed.

7. That further agitation of the subject of slavery which has heretofore promoted neither the welfare of the slave nor the cause of emancipation can be productive of nothing but evil. It has been adjusted by Congress and with that adjustment, it should be permitted, in our estimation, to rest.

8. That the permanence and stability of the Union are endangered by the officious interference of fanatical and disloyal spirits in concerns that do not belong to them.

9. That the series of statutes enacted at the late session of Congress, for the sake of peace, were passed in a spirit of patriotism and judicious compromise, that they are in no respect a departure from the Constitution, and that as it is the obligation, so it ought to be the desire of every citizen of Pennsylvania, manfully to sustain them.

The resolutions were received with loud and repeated cheers.

Hon. JOSIAH RANDALL was introduced next, and seconded the resolutions in the following remarks:—

In seconding the resolutions offered by my friend, (Mr Dallas) I wish to offer a few remarks.

The question of slavery in the United States has at all times created a conflict of feeling. So far as it depends upon the action of the legislatures of the different States, it is now settled upon a basis which cannot be shaken, the constitutional provision may be stated in a single word—non-interference—or as it is sometimes called non-intervention. Slavery is the subject of domestic policy—each State, old or new, has the right to admit or exclude slavery, as the people may determine, and there is no power to prevent it. Pennsylvania or any other free State may re-introduce slavery within its limits whenever its legislature must direct so to do. If the thirteen old States possess the power the new States must also possess it, because under the Federal compact the States have equal rights. The admission or exclusion of slavery rests with the people, and neither the ordinance of 1787, nor the declaration of Congress in the admission of Missouri have any valid authority, and territories included within the interdiction, when admitted as States, have full right to establish slavery within their limits—one thing is certain, that if they should exercise this power, there is no authority vested in Congress, or any other body, to dispute or set it aside.

The important subject which now agitates the people of this country, is that of fugitive slaves, and the act passed by Congress, at their last session, giving the owner facilities to claim his fugitive slave—This act is in its spirit and principles, constitutional, judicious and salutary. It bears upon the face of it the impress of haste in legislation. It is ambiguous in some parts, and some minor provisions may be exceptionable, but its cardinal features are just and right. It cannot be expected that a whole system can be struck out at a single heat. Amendments developed by the practical operation will suggest themselves, and will of course be adopted.

What is asked from us by the Southern States is that we should not aid and assist their slaves in running away. It is not necessary to enter into a history of the manner in which the emancipation of the slaves in the West Indies was effected in Great Britain—it was a race between the Whigs and Tories which should secure public sympathy; but if it had been to emancipate slaves living at home amongst themselves, it would have presented a very different question and it is believed that it never would have passed. Still under all their excitement they never proposed to emancipate the slave without paying his master an equivalent. Public opinion in the mother country has done much to produce the present state of things in this country, but we must do them justice—they never encouraged the fugitives to run away, nor proposed any system by which the master should be deprived of his rights without just satisfaction.

The present Fugitive Bill should be carried out by the Judicial authority of the country, and that authority should be enforced by public opinion. This is the issue—if we do not concede this ground fully and cheerfully, we violate the original Federal Compact and give the South just right to complain of our conduct.

The wilful harboring of a fugitive slave is a grave offence in morals as well as law, and those who commit this offence can exculpate themselves upon no other ground than the recognition of a higher authority than the Constitution and laws of the Union, the benefits of which they are continually enjoying and which in all other matters they seek for their own protection. I freely admit that among the few abolitionists in our community are to be found the most exemplary men in private life, but their purity of character is of no value when it jeopards all that is dear to us.

In our own State legislation we are not without fault—the act passed by the Legislature of Pennsylvania the 3d day of March, 1847, contains many features in my opinion odious and unconstitutional, and it ought, and, I have no doubt, will be repealed at the next session of the Legislature.

Many well disposed persons in the North suppose that the fugitive slave law will be abused. There is no ground for this fear Kidnapping is in the north too offensive to be allowed. Public sentiment will ere on the side of the fugitive, not against him; but kidnapping is as, odious in the South as it is in the North, and those who imagine that in the South a free black man can with impunity be seized and kept as a slave know nothing of the state of public feeling and opinion in the slave holding States—Any law may be condemned, if the argument be based upon its abuse. I am authorized to say by my friend David Paul Brown, Esq., that during a most extensive practice of more than thirty years, in protecting fugitive slaves, he has never known an instance of a black or colored man being delivered up contrary to the truth of the case.

I am not afraid of public sentiment in New England; that noble people have made too many sacrifices for the preservation of the Union, to hesitate in fulfilling their duty to the uttermost point. It will be remembered that the South do not seek to force slavery upon the North—they only ask it may be protected within their own limits.

Let us be true to ourselves and our country, and all will be well. The people of the United States are attached to the Union—The President and the administration concur in this sentiment—a large majority of both Houses of Congress respond to the same—the value of the Union is known and felt—it must and will be preserved—the cord which unites the States together is elastic—it may be stretched, but it will rebound and unite the glorious bunch of fagg ots together by a stronger bond than ever.

The Hon. JOSEPH R. INGERSOLL being loudly called for, said. It might fairly be questioned under circumstances different from those which actually surround us, whether this part of the country would require any public demonstration to prove its integrity. Our good old Commonwealth has lived in vain, if it has not laid down all doubts of its loyalty to the Union.—Pennsylvania is, we may trust, in principle and practice, not less than in position, the Keystone of the great Federal Arch. This State has sustained itself in that eminent and responsible station, and it can fail to do so only when the massive pillars which it serves to hold together, shall crumble into ruin. It will, I trust, on that evil and far distant day—as it was among the earliest to contribute efficiently its undivided strength to general prosperity—all relinquished tantly and the last, to the universal dissolution.

Let us rejoice that this self-creating, spontaneous movement of patriotism, stirred up only by an innate love of the Union by an attachment to the principles and establishment by which it is sustained, prompts us to speak with no equivocal voice, and no power to prevent it. Pennsylvania or in terms too explicit to be misunderstood. Individual preferences and any other free State may re-introduce sla- sectional prejudices lend their stern and very within its limits whenever its legisla- stubborn sinews at the call. Party is ture may direct so to do. If the thirteen- tated to veil its face before the altar of old States possess the power the new States the country. The country, itself requires Federal compact the States have equal ded by assemblies of enthusiastic citizens rights. The admission or exclusion of sla- who are willing to forget their own authority rests with the people, and neither the ity in the still higher authority, which ordinance of 1787, nor the declaration of springing from themselves commands their Congress in the admission of Missouri have almost reluctance—bowed down to the sovereignty of the law.

Now the power to legislate upon this peculiar subject is exclusively in Congress—Its power was exercised soon after the Constitution was formed, and it invoked or authorized the agency of State officers for the purpose of more acceptably in each jurisdiction executing the law. When this agency of State officers was prohibited by the State itself, and that which yesterday was a duty, became to-day a crime or misdemeanor, with penalties affixed—further legislation became incumbent on the nation. Then, and not till then—nor even then immediately, Congress passed a law which has convulsed the country. Passed it not without difficult and mutual concession and forbearance. It is the law of the land,—Enacted by that principle of majority without which a republican government cannot for a moment stand. Enacted undoubtedly according to the constitution, and as already judicially pronounced. Every department of the Government has given it a solemn sanction; and it is as firm as the everlasting hills, in present title, to the respect, obedience, and loyal support of every American citizen. None who deserve the name will dare to violate it.

We are compelled to omit extracts from the speeches of Hon Reuben Rex, Col. Page and J. R. Hazlehurst, for want of room.

Farmer's Emporium!
A Manifest for the Million!

HAVING entered into a contract with the Logan Gap Railroad Co., to supply them with Flour, Pork, &c., for the Northern section of their Road, I am prepared to offer to the Farmers of Susquehanna, and adjoining counties the highest prices for wheat, rye, oats and corn. I will positively pay better prices than can be obtained elsewhere, and what is more I will pay CASH. Farmers from all sections of the county will find it much to their advantage to bring me their grain, instead of carrying it to merchants for store pay, or having on your grain, one and all, I WANT ALL I can get and want you. Don't fear that you will overstock the market. Custom work done as usual.

TO THE PUBLIC.

I would again inform my customers that I have just received a large lot of Ready Made Clothing, warranted to be made in the best manner and of the most fashionable style etc, which I will sell at short profits for cash or produce. I do not say that I will sell at cost as some make pretences to. I have not had my stock on hand long enough that makes me feel so anxious to get rid of it as that, but should any one attempt to undersell me, my old friends may rest assured that I will not fly the track. I defy my rival to undersell me on any article of equal value in my line. Call a few doors above the Democrat Printing Office," and you will find me thar—
