THE FARMER'S COLUMN.

GLEANINGS IN AGRICULTURE.

BY J. BENTOON.

In the sheep districts of the north of England the farms are seldom large, and yet many of the farmers manage to keep pretty numerous flocks of sheep, varying from three to four hundred to the same number of thousands. This, however, is effected only where the population is scanty, and upon which the owners or occupiers of the enclosed land or farms enjoy an unlimited right of pasturage. Hence it frequently happens that the occupier of 80 or 100 acres of enclosed land, and much of it of but an indifferent nature, if he possess sufficient capital, and the farm be convenient ly situated, will keep a flock of 1000 or 2000 sheep.

The real goodness of a soil consists principally, perhaps, in the power it possesses of maintaining a certain degree of moisture; for without this the plant could have no power of deriving nourishment from any aliment; it might be planted on a dunghill, but if that had no moisture in it, no nutriment gen rates; but as long as the soil possesses a moisture, either by its own constituent parts, or by means of a retentive substratum, vegetation goes on. Continue the moisture and increase the aliment, and the plant will flourish in proportion; but if the moisture be denied by soil, substratum, or manure, and vegetation ceases; for though certain plants will long subsist by moisture obtained from the air, yet generally speaking, without a supply by the root they will languish and fade.

Though sheep, like most other animals, are endowed with a certain degree of instinct, yet it does not follow as a matter of course that it always operates towards ensuring their safety. Persons who have had the most frequent opportunities of observing them, generally appear to have come to the conclusion, that when a storm is approaching they are seldom taken by surprise, for, in fact, before it actually comes on, they have endeavored to find a place to shelter themselves from its fury.

Farming in Iceland—The most important branch of rural labor in Iceland is the hay-making. About the middle of July the peasant begins to cut down the grass, which is immediately gathered in a convenient place, in order to dry, and while being turned once or twice, is conveyed home on horse-back to the yard, where it is made up into stacks. At the poorer farms both men and women handle the scythe, but in general the women only assist in making the hay after it is cut. In many parts of the island, where there is much hay, the peasants hire men from the fishing plantations who are paid for their labor at the rate of 30 lbs of butter a week. They cut by measurement, the daily task being about thirty square fathoms. Hay is never being over, the sheep and cattle that had been out all summer on the mountains, are collected; the house is put in a state of repair for the winter. The fine hay is given to the cows only.—Henderson's Iceland.

Mode of preserving Butter fresh—To render butter capable of being kept for any length of time in a fresh condition, that is, as a pure solid oil, all that is necessary, is to boil it in a pan till the water is removed, which is marked by the cessation of violent ebullition. By allowing the liquid oil to stand for a little, the curd subsides, and the oil may then be poured off, or it may be strained through calico or muslin into a bottle, and corked up.—When it is to be used it may be gently heated and poured out of the bottle, or cut out by means of a knife or cheese gouge. This is the usual method of preserving butter in India, and also on the continent, and it is rather remarkable that it is not in general use in this country. It will then keep for any length of time, and is the best form of the substance for sauces.

Shoeing Horses.—It appears that the practice of shoeing horses was brought into England about the time of William the Conqueror. It is said that Welbeck, in Nottinghamshire, belonged to a Sir on chief named Gamelbere, who held it on condition of shoeing the king's palfrey, whenever he should be at the manor of Mansfield, and that if he should lame the palfrey, he should give the king another worth four marks. William the Conqueror is said also to have given the town of Northampton as a fief to a certain person in consideration of his paying a certain sum yearly for the shoeing of his horses; and it is generally believed that Hereford Ferrers, who came over with William, and whose descendants still bear on their arms six horse-shoes, received that surname because he was entrusted with the inspection of the farriers. At what period horses-shoes, as we now have them, were introduced, is, like many other things, lost to us forever. Historians inform us that the Emperor Nero, when he undertook short journeys, was drawn by mules which had silver shoes, and those of his wife, Poppæa, had shoes of gold. But these shoes appear to have been a kind of plait of gold and silver stripes, covering the hoofs. About the year 1036, when the Marquis of Tuscany, one of the richest princes of his time, went to meet his affianced bride, (Beatrix) his horses were shod with silver; the nails were of the same material. Yet in much more modern times an English ambassador at the court of Paris had silver shoes to his horses, and caused them to be so slightly fixed that they soon came off. This appears to us, in the 19th century, extravagant folly, and scarcely to be believed; yet we have evidence of the truth of it.

Wool—From the earliest periods of our history, we find the growth and manufacture of wool enjoying the attention of successive governments.—The sheep is, in all probability, one of the indigenous animals of our country, as there are no records—at least, so far as we are aware—of its introduction; and we find the Romans estimating so highly our wool, and the garments made from it, as to establish a manufactory at Winchester, the fountain head of the now mighty stream of British woollen manufacture. From this time the growth and spinning of wool became an object of universal government to all. Towards the end of the seventeenth century the value of wool shorn in England was estimated at two millions yearly, which, supposed to be quadrupled in value in the manufacture, made the entire value of the articles manufactured, eight millions, of which two millions were exported. In 1700 the official value of woollen exported, amounted to three millions; in 1800 it had only increased half a million. By 1808, however, exports had increased enormously, the amount for that year being £7,321,681, which has only been exceeded once, in 1825, when they amounted to £7,766,942. The revolution of the trade with the United States caused a startling reduction in 1837, when the official value of the exports had fallen to £4,051,623. This decline can only, however, be considered temporary.

LOAFERS—The United States have decidedly the most versatile and accomplished loafers of any land in christendom or out of it either, for that matter. It is said the Italian loafer can do nothing but sleep; the English nothing but swear; the French nothing but laugh; the Russian nothing but gamble; the Hungarian nothing but smoke; and the German nothing but drink. But the real genuine, unadulterated, American loafer, is the only fellow in creation, who possesses the united ability to do all these things in the greatest perfection. He can sleep sounder than the Italian perpendicular against a lamp-post with the thermometer below zero without any inconvenience whatever. He can emit a horse laugh that will put a Frenchman clear out of countenance in less than a minute. As to swearing it is his forte.—He can make an Englishman half stand on end, by the terrific volubility and originality of his oaths. He can beat a Russian at his favorite game, and then play the thimble on him with perfect impunity.—He can smoke a long nine with more grace and gusto than a Hungarian ever dreamed of, and drink a Dutchman under the table on malt liquor or Rhenish wine. In short, he is a fellow of marvellous versatility—a genus homo, alone peculiar to the soil of the Great Republic.

BOTCH WORK—A very eccentric clergyman, named David Jones, who flourished in Gotham a few years since, was passing through Broadway one morning at an early hour, when he was startled by a voice, apparently issuing from the gutter, crying:—

"Good morning, neighbor Jones."

The worthy divine looked about him, for his "neighbor," and at last discovered an object wallowing in the kennel

"Who is it," said he, "that calls me neighbor Jones?"

"Why, don't you recollect me? You converted me the other Sunday."

"Converted you? O yes! very probably, you look just like a piece of my botch work. If God had converted you, I should not have found you in the gutter."

TRUE PHILOSOPHY—A country poet after looking about over life, has come to the following rhyming conclusion:

Oh, I would'nt live forever,
I wouldn't if I could;
But I'm afraid I feel about it,
For I could not if I would."

IN TIME OF PEACE PREPARE FOR WAR—On Cape Cod, when a young lady is engaged to be married, she suffers her finger nails to grow long, so in case she should be obliged to throw herself on her reserved rights, she may, "come to the scratch with some prospect of success."

A coach containing a young man and woman, with a trunk on behind the coach, is pleasingly suggestive of matrimony.—But half a dozen young ones and seven handboxes, is much more suggestive—there's no mistaking that sign

☞ The last question before a "Philosophical Society," is, "the quantity of cream in the milky way, whether it can be made available for household purposes."

☞ Nine o'clock is never so long coming as when a girl is sitting up for a beau. To make moments hours all that is necessary, is to mix them with a little jealousy.

HANG UP THE WASHBOARD AND TUB—Fifty thousand pianos were manufactured last year, in New York city alone

SO.—The Lady who was forty years old at the taking of the census in 1840, reports herself at thirty-seven this year.

☞ Down South, to knock a man down with a chair, while he is addressing an audience, is called cheering the speaker.

☞ The modest young lady who refused to go into a rifle manufactory because some of the guns had no breeches, is spending a few days at Saltant

A JOKE.—An Irishman went a fishing and among other things he landed in, was a large sized turtle. To enjoy the surprise of the servant girl he placed it in her room. The next morning, the first that bounced into the breakfast room was Biddy, with the exclamation of:—

"Be Japers, I've got the devil!"

"What devil?" inquired the head of the house, feigning surprise

"The bull bed-bug that has been ateing the children for the last month."

☞ The only capital punishment the ladies are in favor of, is hanging around their necks. Capital enough.

JUSTICE—Wrong none by doing injuries, or omitting the due acts that are your duty.

A deacon of the South Church, Boston, having been invited to join in the serenade to Jenny Lind, said he could not think of such a thing, but if it would be any favour to the committee, he would go on the next evening and sing a Psalm or two under her window

What's in a name?—At the Westboro' Fair they had a cow named "Jenny Lind," and a calf named "Barnum."

COURT EXAMINATION.—Magistrate.—What brought you here, sir.?

Prisoner.—Two policemen, please yer honor.

Magistrate.—Then I suppose liquor had something to do with it?

Prisoner.—Yes, yer honor they were both awful drunk.

Short reckonings always make long friends.

Boys if you would be honored men take care of your conduct now.

Air and exercise are the best remedies for consumption. If you would have healthy lungs, rise before daybreak!!

☞ A Western editor, in speaking of a contemporary, says he has got that low cunning look that makes you involuntarily think of your pocket-book, and to thank the Lord there are laws against larceny.

☞ "Julius are you convalescent this morning?"

"No; I was convalescent yesterday but I took medicine last night and worked it off."
