

The zaphyrs there pensively sigh, And the buds and the blossoms are laving In the stream that runs murmuring by And thuber the little birds wing. To settle benenth the cool shude, And all the day long do they sing O'er the spot where my sister was laid.

'Tis there in the sun's early gleaming, When d-w-drops are glittering bright, And when the pale moon's mellow beaming Bathes all with its soft silver light, Yes, there, when the flow'rets all sleep And silence broads over the glade, I would sit me in sorrow to weep, O'er the spot where my enter was laid

When this vision of life shall-be over; When its vanities all disappear ; And the mantle of coolness shall cover The form that in sorrow sits here ; Oh! then let me sleep in the grave Which the hand of affection has made, By the stream where the wild willows waye In the spot where my sister was laid.
