which the Lord displayed on this occasion, had all along been scrupulously imitated, a vast amount of self torture would have been obviated. But in the stead of this, changes have been made, misery produced, and sin committed:—I say sin, because, when any of God's purposes are prevented, whoever does so, there commits sin. That soft skins were substituted for fig-leaves, is conclusive that clothing was designed for enjoyment—for ease—instead of torture.

I do not deny that our ancestors had, and that we have the right of changing the form of our attire, while convenience, ease and enjoyment are a desideratum which ever should have been and ever should be paramount to all other; in the departure from which consists the evil and the sin. It is a duty unquestionable to resist & cherish health—the reverse, to waste it. Our garments in their length and breadth and fit to our persons, have been more or less adapted to counteract the former, and to produce the latter. There is abundantly more female weakness and debility now than there was forty years ago. Our girls can not now endure that amount of toil and fatigue which their mothers then did. But why can they not! Has human nature deteriorated from natural cause—we ought to know that because—we ought to remove it—duty to God and ourselves enjoin it: and I know of no cause so efficient in the work of waste, of torture and disease, as that of long, bulky, cumberous, tight and ponderous attire.

From infancy to old age, fashion demands our garments to be of undue proportions and injurious tightness: yes, we are, and must be, to appear chaste and fashionable, girted and fettered all along the way of life, a few short years in childhood excepted. We give the girl when she begins her tottering walk, a short, light and easy dress, that her limbs may be encumbered, and that in person she may appear chaste and cleanly. This is proper—is right. Among the first lessons we teach children, are those of modesty, chastity, decency and propriety. If this short and easy dress be appropriate, modest and chaste for little girls, why is it less so for large girls? for women generally? If the least of unchastity be attached to it in womanhood, it must be equally so in childhood; and surely that precept and example should walk together, the child should be dressed as full grown people are. If this be so, I beseech you no longer teach daughters modesty and chastity by precept, and then contradict your own words by the clothes you give them to wear.

It is well and truly said by Mrs. M. S. Gove Nichols in her lecture on woman's dress.—

The weight of skirts and quilts worn by women—would wear out the strongest man and gain him spinal disease. Then the fetter we always carry around the ancle, wearies and wearies forever;—when we hold up those long skirts out of mud and rain, we run constant risk of indelicate exposure. They are always in danger of being trodden upon, and if we go up stairs we cannot carry any thing but our clothes, and then often risk falling. In our present dress, a pretty foot is not allowed the peep of day, and ancles are only made to be encased in filth and dirt swept up from the walk and constantly accumulated above the shoe. The lives of women have often been sacrificed from their long garments catching in machinery," &c. Now this and a great deal more, is all true. A few years since I knew a young lady, whose dress caught as she was passing over a wall, whereby she fell and was crushed beneath the stone which her dress drew after her. Several times have I seen women prostrated on the street or pavement, to the no small injury of cloth and persons, (to say nothing of exposure to which woman in her present costume is always exposed,) by their long dresses catching or being trodden upon by themselves while descending from the carriage, and which an appropriate attire would have prevented.

Say what you will, those who are disposed to condemn and hiss at the proposed change in female dress; the long established inconsistency in that attire alone blinds you to all the facts, inconsistencies and absurdities therein. If Adam and Eve were introduced to you in that costume which Jehovah gave them, you would find fault; the contrast would be too great for your feeble sense of what is proper to bear it. I see nothing indecorous, unchaste, or condemnable in the proposed change of costume, while many are the valid and unanswerable arguments which cluster around in support of it. And there is nothing but the dread of the jest, the sneer and the scoff of those who are ever ready, as they are prone, to jest sneer, and scoff, which prevents its immediate and general adoption. Ladies, let not such trifles deter you in the way to health and enjoyment.

AUNT LOIS.

From the Pennsylvanian.

HONESDALE, Wayne Co., Sept. 3, 1851.

Col. J. W. FORNEY.—Our local nominations were made on Monday evening of this week, and last nigt an unusually large meeting of the Democracy was held to ratify the doings of our Convention. The Court House was filled to overflowing, and resolutions pledging a full and hearty support to the State, judicial, and County tickets, were unanimously adopted.

Hon. George W. Woodward was present, and during the absence of the committee to prepare resolutions, favored us with an eloquent address. He warmly eulogized the private character and public services of Col. Bigler. Spoke of the importance at this time of electing a man holding sound opinions upon questions of national as well as of local interest—reviewed the highly censurable and cowardly course pursued by Governor Jhonston, in withholding his signature from the bill repealing the law of 1847—alluded to the many false issues which the Whigs are endeavering to force into the present contest, instead of manifesting a willingness to meet the questions manfully, and discuss the subject fairly upon its own merits.

Judge Woodward referred particularly to a slanderous and shameful attack which has recently been made upon himself in the columns of the Harrisburg American, and re-published in the Montrose Register of last week, the design of which was to induce our naturalized citizens to withhold their support from Col. Bigler, because he and Judge W. were warm personal and political friends.

The Judge entered fully into the questions of Native Americanism, with which he has been charged—settling the matter, so far as he is concerned, in its true light. A report of his remarks will be published in the Herald of this week, to which I refer you for a fuller account than I am able to give you at this time.

So far as this base effort of Col. Johnston and his affiliated papers was intended to operate upon Wayne county, they will have their troble for their pains. Judge Woodward is known here; he was born in this neighbood, and his endorsement of Col. Bigler, if any endorsement was necessary, would be entirely sufficient and satisfactory satisfactory to the Democracy of Wayne; but the Susquehanna Raftsman is also known here, and just as sure to receive 800 majority in Wayne, and 25,000 in the State, as that he has been nominated.

Judge Woodward announced his intention to spend some considerable part of the present and coming month in advocating the cause of Col. Bigler in the neighboring counties, and he is just as able as he is willing to do him efficient service.

Respectfully, yours,
HONESDALE.

Destructive Conflagration in Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Sept. 12, 9 P. M.

About half-past 4 o'clock, this afternoon, our city was startled by the alarm of fire, which proceeded from the burning of the Ryan Building, one of the largest structures in Pittsburg, occupied by a number of mechanics, who rent rooms and steam power from Mr. Ryan to carry on their various branches of business.

For a time the utmost consternation prevailed among the residents in the immediate vicinity, but our gallant firemen were promptly on the spot, and our citizens lent a willing hand to extinguish the flames.—It appears that the fire caught from carelessness among the machinery in the building.

One half the extensive edifice fronting on Virgin alley is entirely destroyed. Ryan & McKee's loss is estimated, in the building and machinery, at $55,000.

On the east, F. R Dravo's loss is set down at $5,500. He is insured in the Fireman's and Columbus offices for $3,000.

H. Campbell's brickhouses were partially injured. He is fully insured.

Two brick houses on Virgin alley were burned. They were owned by S. Robinson's heirs.

Watson's blacksmith shop is also consumed, together with his veneer shops, one box factory, and one turning shop.

The fire at one time threatened destruction to a large portion of the city, and was only saved by the superhuman and gallant exertions of the fireman. The loss is estimated $35,000.

The weather is extremely warm, and the river remains as yesterday.

At 10 o'clock, the Convention was temporarily organized by the appointment J. L. Gibson, of Kentucky, as Chairman.

Thirteen States are represented, 117 delegates are in attendance. Others are hourly arriving from different sections.

Your delegation (Philadelphia,) with the exception of Mr. J. B. Smith, are present.

The Terrible Riot at Christiana.

We learn that the scene of the murderous riot was in the vicinity of Christiana, in Lancaster county, near the borders of Chester. The persons killed were Mr. Edward Gorsuch, an old Gentleman who resided about nineteen miles from Baltimore, Maryland, and his son, Dickinson, a young man. The father was shot dead by one of the fugitive slaves, of whom he was the owner. The son was mortally wounded in the bloody affray, and survived but a short time. The slave who shot his master, was himself wounded in the left arm. He is described in a despatch to Police Marshal Keyser, as a tall, slim mulatto fellow, with full round face, and good looking.

A despatch to one of the telegraph reporters yesterday forenoon' says that the Sheriff of Lancaster county was wounded; also another young man. The Philadelphia officer shot at so often without being hit, was named Henry Kline, who writes to Recorder Lee that the number of engroes who made the attack, was from fifty to one hundred. Although in the midst of the fight, he escaped being injured.

When Mr. Gorsuch and the party with him came up, he informed Pinkey (this was the name of the fugitive slave), that he had been after him several times before without getting him. That he was determined to have him this time, and had come to take him or die in the attempt.

The slave then immediately fired on him, when he fell and expired, having, it is said, seven balls in him.

When the son saw the father fall, he drew his revolver and fired on the slave. The latter had started to escape, and was running. Three balls hit him, penetrating the hip, and passing out in front.

At this moment a large party of negroes, concealed in the corn fields, rushed out at him, giving him no chance to discharge any more barrels. They shot him in the side, a whole load entering. Then rushing on him with their muskets and clubs, they battered his arm to a jelly, breaking it in several places.

The friends and officers who accompanied Mr. Gorsuch and his son, were completely overwhelmed. Two of the number are missing, and supposed to be murdered.

The white people of the neighborhood of the scene refused to assist the officers, and could afford no facilities for the pursuit of the murderers, who escaped. They refused even to furnish a waggon and horses. No arrests were made.

The assailing party was headed by an old negro preacher. When he saw the fallen bodies of Mr. Gorsuch and son, he rushed forward with his arms extended, saying, "forbear, men, forbear. You'll all be hung? They are dead!"

There is some sympathy for the dead, but the citizens seemed afraid to express it. They have apprehensions for safety of their lives and property at the hands of the black rioters and their white abbettors.

Dear little treasure of our hearts,
How soon thy life has fled;
How soon thou hast been call'd away,
And numbered with the dead.

'Tis hard to lay one loved so much.
Low in the cold dark earth;
Ne'er to behold his smiles again,
Or hear his playful mirth.

Oh! in how many nameless ways,
Wilt thou thy dear one miss;
His gladsome voice and happy smiles,
His rosy lips' sweet kiss.

But look not to the cold dark grave,
Nor let thy heart despair;
For e'en now faith points to heaven,
And says that "he is there."

Then weep not, parent, for thy child,
Who from thy arms hath gone,
To shine in heaven a spirit bright,
A star in Jesus' Crown.
