

away from home. Exactly as the wearer of it, straight forward; caring for no one save himself; and very punctual in engagements. If others are not punctual they are his enemies. Never will he be led and if crossed he will turn upon you and have revenge. A mixture of his and large heartedness. In the same proportion do all the scores vary, as to the color and kind of their hair; and from this, dear reader, may be traced the nature of the subjects themselves. Have you an hour to while away? Instead of your hands, run your eyes over the hair of your neighbor, and see what sort of a man he is. If he be a man, mind I say man; for woman is unobservable problem—beyond all art, whether magic or not magic.

The truth of wisdom being in the hair, as well as the head, has been generally known, though not with a conviction of its importance. The gaseous minister, when he scolded the young pigtail, first invoked the blessing upon the hair of the head, as the highest part of man's nature.

The faithful betrothed seeks a lock for her keeping; for by that she can study the heart and its treasures.

Some whose hair will betray their faults, never to a favorable view; and thus endeavor to plumb themselves off for respectable. Beware of such; for wigs cover a multitude of evils!

Minks and anachorites of small souls, and still smaller brains, distrust their story-telling hair, crop their locks, and then come forth as prophets and teachers; saying study has caused their blindness.

out-breaks, seemed to be the order of the day. A band of adventurers had moreover entered upon a new revolution, the object, as already stated, being to establish the Republic of the Santa Madre, and in their preliminary steps, they had been completely successful. Thus another valuable portion of her territory is about to be wrested from the Republic. It embraces three States—all bordering on the Rio Grande, and extends over a tract of land three times as large as New York, and containing a population of 450,000 souls.

The parties to this movement are the dissatisfied at home, and the restless from abroad. The discontented, within the Mexican lines, and the adventurous from the Border States of the American Union. What are likely to be the results? First, independence—then, the organization of a distinct Government, and possibly annexation to the United States.

The Statesmen of Mexico must see the condition of affairs, and be anxious to avoid it. But how can this be done? They lack the ability in every point of view. Their treasury is exhausted, their leaders are corrupt, their people are feeble. Santa Anna is the only man who, for many years, has exhibited any thing like vigor, and his day of power and popularity appears to be over.

And thus, the Republic would seem to be doomed. Tried by track and State by State—her territories are wrested from her, and the chances are, that a century hence, and even less, the Mexican Republic will live only in history.—Launcesterian.

Mr. Campbell. This gentleman, one of our nominees for Supreme Judicial honor, and by the way, one of the most worthy in the whole catalogue of names presented by both parties, although somewhat behind his ticket in Philadelphia, as is also Mr. Lewis, is doubtless elected. We say doubtless elected, because the Whigs have been glorying in his supposed defeat, and the choice of Mr. Coulter in his place, but we have seen nothing yet to satisfy us that Mr. Campbell has not a fair majority in the State.

Out of the Party. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted at the recent Free Soil Convention in Cincinnati:

Resolved, That as the Hon. S. P. Chase, Senator in Congress from this State, has formerly withdrawn from our party; while we regret this course, and that it may not be injurious to the cause of freedom, we feel it to be our duty to declare to the public that we do not hold ourselves responsible for his official acts, or recognize him as our representative.

For the Democrat. Messrs. Chase—Mutability is stamped upon all terrestrial objects; and it would seem that instability has long been taking lessons from Nature's system and laws. Now this may all be well enough when improvements to enlarge human happiness is the direct and only design. Sauciness from year to year, in any thing—in every thing, as well as in dress, proceeds safely; and an inking arises in the human breast for something new, in mode or fashion. This is surely not reprehensible, but otherwise; and, if caprice and fancy were not, and never had been, allowed to thrust judgment and common sense one side—if reason had ever been at the helm—if all the true means of promoting happiness had all along been sought, as in agriculture and the arts—the present generation had been free from much of that amount of deformity, imbecility, disease and sorrow, to which life seems to be heir to. Is it indeed too late to consult reason, and to correct error? Shall grumblers and jeers, and those who make it their business to jest, to grin, and to squib at every change in society, without regard to merit or defect, hinder that reformation in attire which reason and judgment approve and applaud?

The Next Legislature. The Whigs and Native Americans by their base coalition, which we exposed before the election in part, have elected for Native Members of the Legislature, and the Senator in Philadelphia county. The Democrats elect six Members. The house will probably stand 46 Whig Native Americans, and 54 Democrats. In the Senate 16 Democrats and 17 Whigs with the one Native. The Democrats will have a majority on joint ballot of seven.

The Majorities in the County. By the official vote which we publish in another part of this paper, the following majorities appear:

Death of Hon. Wm. E. Little. We extract the following notice of the death of this gentleman, from the Journal Signal. Mr. Little was a son of George and brother of R. B. Little Esq. of Montrose. Many of our citizens will remember the deceased, though for the past twelve or fifteen years he has resided in Northern Illinois, where it will be seen, he had become eminent in his profession, and prominent in the affairs of the State.

Mr. Little had been engaged in the practice of law in this place, for the past twelve years; and had risen to an eminence in his profession seldom reached. His brilliant and towering eloquence, and profound judgment, rendered him one of the first advocates in the State. For several years he represented this Representative district in our State Legislature; and his talents—his unflinching devotion to principle—his sagacity as a statesman—his magnanimity, gave him great influence in the body of which he was a member. As a politician, he was enthusiastically devoted to the cause of the masses—a firm and unswerving democrat; but his candor and meanness in the enforcement of his political views won the respect of even his opponents. It was impossible to know him without respecting and admiring him—hence his popularity among all classes. And, had his days not been cut short by an untimely death, he would have risen to the highest honors in the State.

Death of Commodore Warrington. We have the mournful duty, says the Republic, of announcing the death of Commodore Lewis Warrington, of the United States Navy, who, at his residence in this city yesterday morning, in the 60th year of his age. Commodore Warrington was a native of Virginia, and in his early years graduated with credit at William and Mary College, in that State. He entered the navy on the 6th of January, 1800, and was commissioned as a post-captain on the 22d of November, 1814. He was the third officer of the naval ship, Commodore Warrington distinguished himself by his gallant conduct in the late war, especially in the engagement between the Peacock and Epervier. At the time of his death he was chief of the Ordnance Bureau. Thought of dauntless courage and of brave demeanor in command, not a more feeling and generous-hearted man ever breathed; and his honor was without spot.

Lackawanna and Western Railroad. The work on this road, having been completed in the early part of the week, a train of cars—containing the President and Board of Directors—passed over the line, from Great Bend to Scranton, on Wednesday afternoon last—leaving the former place at 4 o'clock, P. M., and arriving in Scranton at half past five, the same evening. A large concourse of the citizens of the Valley assembled at the splendid Depot, to witness this first arrival; and as the cars approached the station, they were welcomed with the loud voice of the cannon and still louder cheers from the crowd of spectators. During the evening speeches were made by various gentlemen connected with the enterprise, and congratulations offered between the citizens of Western New York and the Lackawanna Valley, in anticipation of the good which was bound to result to them, respectively, by means of the intimate connection now opened to them, through the completion of the Lackawanna and Western Railroad. And, indeed, the importance of this road to the Mining interests and general prosperity of the Lackawanna Valley, will be incalculable, as it opens an entirely new market, of such vast extent, that all the industry—considerable as it is—that is now employed in developing the mineral resources, which lie in the bowels of our mountains, will not be adequate to supply the demand for them, which will soon be created in Western New York.

THE LAST PROCLAMATION.—The last proclamation which Gov. Johnson will issue will be ordering a Day of Thanksgiving, in November next. If he had issued it instead of the Sinister and proclamation, it would doubtless have done him more good.

More Havana Items. Mrs. Patterson, of Mobile who went to Havana in order to procure the pardon of her son, Charles A. Downer, arrived too late to see him, as he had already sailed with the other prisoners to Spain.
