

Every one who sate bread or wares cloth Position of American Farmers. made of wool, flax or cotton, has a direct personal interest in the result of tilling and the re Hunger and nakedness are wants of the pressing character; and providence has breed them alike in every human being.

In civilizat committies, all are equally dependent on successful agriculture for the means of subsistence. Let a soil be perno language can adequately describe the intensity of universal sufferings that must ensue. Mence this branch of national indu try has peculiar and paramount claims t, the carnest attention and fostering care of all governments which are regardful of the public safety and sustained by common rense. American agriculture offers for consideration several interesting and striking features; prominent among these is the fact that mearly three fourths of the labor and apithl of the country are employed in this her feelings, she loves to see this kindness single pursuit. Agriculturists are themselves a large majority of the voters, taxhayers, and consumers of all domestic and roreign goods.

Under our republican system, they are mainly responsible for the good govern-ment of cach State, and of the Union. If their public servants whether in Congress or in State Legislatures, fail to promote improvements in agriculture, as recommended by President Washington, the fault is not in their representatives, but Government may properly grant.

American farmers enjoy advantages superior to these of all other nations for improving both themselves as a class and their landed catates, up to the highest capabilities of man, and of the earth which he e lluyares. This Republic proffers to rural science more than one thousand millions of acres of available farming lands; of which as little, or as much as may be subdued and improved as wisdom shall dictate. There is neither compulsion nor restraint in either direction.

With this entire freedom of action is ussociated a degree of security for life, liberry, prperty, toleration of religion and exuption of onerous taxes, without a parelled in the history of the world. In extent of seacoast, facilities for river, lake, and canal navigation; in variety of climate, soil, vegetable and animal products; in indefinite and definite and almost unlimited commeroial manufacturing, mineral and hydraulic resources, no other country equals this .-There is some danger, however, that we shall prove unworthy of so great blessings that we may forget the source whence they came, abuse the peculiar advantages and exalted privileges which we possess, and blindly cling to the barbareous practice of injury of coming generations.

Instead of exhausting millions of acres without any adequate recompense, instead of locking longingly toward the wilderness of forest and pararie at the west, we should search closely into the lands already under the plough, and learn what can be didner to add two, three, and fourfold to their present productiveness. The time has at last arrived when it is indespensible to the combinated presperity of all other States communed prosperity of all other States that the principles both of renovating and exhausting cultivated fields be thoroughly and universally understood.

She aims to do everything from correct principles, and could not be induced, for the rake of exercise, to neglect a single known duty. She was never known to turn away from the poor and the offlicted because they were in humble circumstances, but would stand by them to the last, even though compelled, for want of food, to graw a post. She rejoiced in visits of mercy and cheerfully went any distance to impart comfort to the disconsolate or to nid them in the burial of their dead. She was excellent at funerals, having a very fast walk, and was ever at the service of the infirm aged, or such occasions. She would lead a procession for miles, faster than any horse ever known in this region, and yet not go out of a walk.
