The Governor's Mansion. Some of our cotemperaries appear to consider that ten thousand dollars, for a gubernaonal mansion, is too trifling a sum for a great State, like Pennsylvania, to expend in such a purpose. To our view, however, this is the grong way to consider the subject. The real tion is whether ten thousand dollars will a sufficient to erect a dwelling house in Harrishing, suitable for a man with an income not exceeding four thousand dollars, and who not execute the compelled to spend a large portion of will be compelled to spend a large portion of that income in hospitalities. The idea that a certain amount of shows, in the style and size the mansion, is necessary for the dignity of Pennsylvania, is essentially anti-republican; den mir cotemporaries will universally conand so that the control of the contr ion is certainly demanded for the wants the State, but its cost ought not to exceed dwelling in a handsome manner, sufficiently rapacious Everything like extravagance hould be carefully avoided; and utility should e the main aim of the architect. Though ee States have now been free for nearly ghty years, a good deal of the old, aristocratspirit vet lingers in social life; and it is to s that we attribute the mistaken feeling which prevails to a great degree, that Governmp and show .- Evening Bullitin.
