A Bear Hunt.

BY ENOCH FITZWHISTLER, C. C. B.

Last summer I met Peter Snooks, Esq., in Conway, N. H. It was at Fabyan's Hotel. I had just opened the office, and was just going towards the pedestal upon which stood a large jar of ice-water, for the purpose of quenching my thirst with that pure beverage, when a small door, located directly behind the counter, suddenly opened, and what to my wondering eyes should appear, but the rotundical form of my friend, and your friend and the world's friend Snooks. The afore-mentioned door opened to a small room where Peter Hines kept his whip, and where sundry boarders hung up their hats, and consequently it may be reasonably supposed that Snooks had been in there after his hat.

Of course the unexpected meeting was a happy one, and after having imbibed my water, I sat down by the side of my friend and talked about things in Boston. At length, our conversation turned about our then present vicinity, and for half an hour I patiently listened to Peter's account of his wonderful exploits in trout fishing.

"Fitz," said he, after he had gone as far as I thought good for his own credit for veracity, "there's a whopping great bear up beyond Eagle Ledge."

"So I've heard," said I.

"He comes nearly every night into Bill Cubble's cornfield," continued Snooks, "and yet they can't trap him. I tell you Fitz he's an old one."

I assented.

"I've been thinking," said Peter after a moments hesitation, "that if he can't be trapped he may be shot. Dare you join in with me, in an expedition, this night, against the bear?"

"I'm with you," returned I, with much enthusiasm, for I was as ripe for an adventure as he.

"Only think, Fitz, if we do take him, what a feather in our hats."

After sundry discussions as to the modus operandi to be followed, we separated, each to prepare for the expedition, and it was agreed that we should meet at the edge of Nat Abbott's sap wood; so that no one in the village might suspect our intentions.

At about five o'clock, P. M., we met at the appointed place, each armed with a heavy rifle and a butcher knife, and taking the Great Interval Road, we trudged along towards our destination.

Most of the way, the road ran along the bank of Swift river, one of the best trout streams in New England, and here again I was edified by Snooks' account of various piscatory exploits.

It was dark when we reached Bill Coble's house, and the old fellow's table was laden with hot buckwheat cakes, steaming bannocks, new milk, &c., we stepped in and partook, after which we explained to our hosts the object of our visit.

Bill assured us that the bear did visit his cornfield and that we might shoot him if we could, and furthermore, that he would afford any facility in his power.

The cornfield was on a high hill at some distance from the house, and thither Cobble led us, and explained the usual movements of the critter.

Cobble's barn stood at the foot of the hill, and at length it was arranged that Snooks and I should take up our station at a small, square pitching window, which looked out at the top of the hay mow at the back of the barn, the hay being now just on a level with the sill.

This place of look out afforded us two advantages; in the first place, it commanded a view of the edge of the cornfield—when there was light enough—and then the least sound of the bear's approach could not fail to reach our ears at that point. We smoked our pipes —or rather our host's pipes—and at about 9 o'clock, we started for our station. Bill having first told us that if we heard the bear we might call him.

The night was somewhat dark, there being no moon, and the few stars that peeped down upon the earth had only power enough to give us faint outlines in the immediate distance, without distinct forms or accurate localities.

We sat ourselves down upon the hay close by the aforementioned open window, and for about an hour we held our watch without seeing or hearing anything except the trees and the low moaning wind. At length—I think Snooks had just said something about seventeen pound pickerel he once caught—I sunk into a quiet sleep.

How long I slept I know not, but I was awakened by a heavy punch between the eleventh and twelfth false rib, just about in the vicinity of the left hypochondrium.

"Fitz-whistler!" exclaimed Snooks in a tone of unbearable anxiety, "he has come now!"

"Who?" asked I, rubbing my eyes with my right hand, and my sore ribs with my left.

"The bear! Come, let us be on the move."

"But we'll call Bill," said I.

"No,—we'll have the fun all to ourselves," returned Snooks, as he shook the hay from his coat; "quick's the word."

Snooks led the way and I followed, and by dint of considerable exertion, we picked our way down from the mow and out into the yard. There we listened for a moment and distinctly heard a crashing among the bushes that skirted the cornfield. With cautious steps we moved up the hill, and, when nearly at the top we stopped to take an observation.

The crashing was still heard, and it came from a point about half way up the side of the field on which we were.

Snooks made a motion to me to be silent and follow him. Then he cocked his rifle, and crept stealthily forward. I did the same and followed. (Snooks went ahead because he said he'd shot bears before.)

"—sh!" whispered the leader, "look just by that clump of bushes."

I looked, and sure enough, there was visible the huge, black proportions of the nocturnal marauder.

"—h!" again fell in breathless tones from Snooks' lips, and creeping a little further forward, he raised his rifle up to his shoulder.

"Hold your fire till I start the cuss," he again whispered.

In a moment more Snooks pulls his trigger. The sharp report rang through the air, and the next instant the black beast was seen to leap into the hedge, where he kicked and thrashed like mad.

"By thunder I b'lieve I've done it for him," yelled Snooks as he sprang forward, "don't fire yet, Fitz!"

By the time we had reached the edge of the bushes into which the poor beast had jumped its thrashing has almost ceased, and what motion he had seemed only the last throes of death.

"I must have taken him in the heart," uttered Snooks. "Ah, Fitz, I'm used to that thing."

By this time I had gained courage, and easing down the hammer of my rifle, I stepped toward and looked over into the thick bushes.

"Look here, Snooks," said I after having gained a fair view of the really defunct animal, "de bears have horns!"

"Horns!" iterated Snooks, droping his murderous rifle and springing to the bushes. He took one long agonizing look at the fallen object of his bullet, and then, turning to me, he uttered in tones utterly indescribable, "Bil Cobble's old black ram; by all that's damnable."

Snooks and I crept through the cornfield, and gained the road at a point about a quarter of a mile from old Bill Cobble's house, from whence we made tracks "a few" for the village.

The next morning, Peter Snooks, Esqr., and his carpet bag, took the stage for the White Mountains, while I sought the retired locality of "Buttermilk Hollow."—Carpet Bag.

A Rattlesnake Story.

Last fall a woman residing in the vicinity of Worcester was p'eking blackberries in a field near her dwelling house, having with her an only child, a bright-eyed little fellow of less than a year old. The babe sat upon the ground in an open space, amusing himself with grasping at a clump of yellow weed that grew within reach, and eating berries brought him from time to time by his mother.

The latter at length, intent upon gathering the fine fruit, passed around a rock which hid her child from view. She was about to return to him, when hearing him laughing and crowing in great glee, and thinking he must be safe as long as he was so happy, she remained a little longer where she was.

Suddenly the little voice ceased, and after another minute delay, the young mother stepped upon the rock to look over expecting to see her baby asleep, instead of which he was setting perfectly motionless, his lips parted, and his wide open eyes fixed with a singular expression upon some object which at first she was unable to discern.

Yet who can judge of her horror when on closer scrutiny she perceived, some four feet from the infant, a rattlesnake with its glittering eyes fastened upon his, and nearing him by an almost imperceptible motion!

The sight of her darling's peril so nearly paralized her, that for an instant she half believed the dreadful fascination had extended to herself, but the certainty, that unless she was the instrument of salvation to her child, he was inevitably lost, in some degree restored her powers. She glanced wildly around for something that might be used as a weapon, but nothing appeared, and already the venomous reptile had passed over half the space which separated him from his victim. Another moment, and all would be lost!—What could be done?

In her hand she held a broad tin pan, and springing from the rock, quick as thought she covered the snake with it, and stood upon it to prevent its escape.

The charm was broken; the child moved, swayed to one side, and began to sob. At the same time the mother recoved her voice and screamed for aid, retaining her position till it arrived, when the cause of her terrible fright was despatched.

The Harmony of Colors in Dress.

Dressing is an art, and few persons study it in that relation, their taste in colors and forms being more the result of fancy and caprice than founded upon any principle of harmony and beauty. Much attention is being bestowed upon the subject of harmony of colors in the London Art Journal, by Mrs. Merrifield, a lady whose artistic taste is eminently displayed in her communications. As the success of many industrial pursuits is dependent upon the observance of the laws regulating the contrasts of colors, it may not be unprofitable to some of our readers to refer to the rules she lays down as indispensable to beauty and harmony. The optical effect of dark and black dresses is to make the figure appear smaller, hence it is a suitable color for stout persons; black shoes diminish the apparent size of the feet. on the contrary, white and light colored dresses make a person appear larger. Large patterns make the figure look shorter, longitudinal stripes if not too wide, add to the height of the figure, horizontal stripes have a contrary effect, and are very graceful.

Incongruity may be frequently observed in the adaptation of colors without reference to their accordance with the complexion of the wearer, as a light blue bonnet and flowers surrounding a sallow countenance, or a pink opposed to a glowing red; a pale complexion associated with a canary or lemon yellow, or one of delicate red and white rendered almost colorless by the vicinity of deep red. If the lady with the sallow complexion had worn a transparent white bonnet; or if the lady with a glowing complexion had lowered it by means of a bonnet of a deeper red color; if the pale lady had improved the cadaverous hue of her countenance by surrounding it with pale green, which by contrast would have suffused it with a delicate pink hue; or had the face of delicate red and white been arrayed in a light blue, or light green, or in a transparent white bonnet, with blue or pink flowers on the inside—how different, and how much more agreeable, would have been the impression on the spectator!

In general the broken and semi-neutral colors are productive of an excellent effect in dress. They may be enlivened by a little positive color, but the contrasting color should bear but small proportion to the mass of principal color. A blue bonnet and dress may be contrasted with an orange colored shawl, but the blue to balance the orange must be of a very deep tone; a pink bonnet may be worn with a green dress, but the hue of each should be carefully assorted according to their exact contrast. Colored shaws are instances in which a great variety of colors may be arranged with harmonious and rich effect. It is always necessary, that if one part of the dress be highly ornamented or consists of various colors, a portion should be plain to give repose to the eye. The French manufacturers pay great attention to this subject, and the good effects of this study are visible in the textile fabrics which they produce, and which are so highly valued. American manufacturers, by the same attention may reach the same degree of perfection.

Wool—its Cost and Prices.

I noticed in a late "New Yorker," a "Review of the Wool Market," and a hint in that, and also in several other papers, of a combination of our principal Eastern dealers for knocking down the price of wool this season. In a Philadelphia paper, I saw a labored effort to make it appear that manufacturers cannot afford to pay the present prices for wool, and gently asking wool-growers to just drop it down 11 cts. per pound.

I would like to make a few remarks on the other side of the question. In the first place, I think the manufacturers are seldom losers in this line of business—for if they have to pay a high price for wool, they sell their cloths in proportion—if they get their wool at a low price, they take a corresponding one for their cloths, always retaining to themselves their price for manufacturing. In regard to this combination of dealers in Philadelphia, New York and Boston, for the purpose of curtailing the profits of the farmers, let us examine the matter a little. I hold that farmers cannot grow wool for less than 30 cents to 40 cents per pound for common wool, and if they go into the finer qualities, they of course obtain a higher price, but at a greater expense. Now while the market prices of Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Brighton and Cambridge, on working oxen is $100 per yoke, cows $35 per head, sheep $4 per head for mutton, swine $8 or $9 per cwt., and the farmer sells his wool for 35 cents per pound, he has too much wool over his own eyes.

The amount of it is, these things will equalize themselves—If wool brings a good price, there will be a general rush for wool growing, and the price will soon fall. On the other hand, if wool is low, farmers will turn their attention to something else,—consequently there will be a demand, and good prices paid for wool. Allowing 35 cents to be a medium price, when our manufacturers and dealers succeed in getting below that point, they are standing in their own light, and will soon have to pay much higher. For sheep that are shorn this June can be made good mutton next Fall and Winter, and our wool can be stored away in the wool houses, and kept for years without detriment or diminution in weight; hence you perceive, that in this particular at least, the "bone and sinew" are as independent as the rest of the body, and cannot be so easily coerced.

Some course, will be compelled by the force of circumstances to sell their wool immediately, but such are generally small lots, and will not materially affect the market. Every thing considered, can we do better at this time than to lay our wool aside, and there let it remain awhile?—Correspondent of Rural N. Yorker.

Ayers Cherry Pictoral,

FOR THE CURE OF COUGHS, AND COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA AND WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of the afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinion of distinguished men and some of the evidences of its success, from which they can judge for themselves. We sincerely pledge ourselves to make no will assertions or false statements of its efficacy, nor will we hold out any hope to suffering humanity which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an inquiry from the public into all we publish, feeling assured that they will find them perfectly reliable, and the medicine worthy their best confidence and patronage.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

Dear Sir: I delayed answering the receipt of your preparation until I had an opportunity of witnessing its effects in my own family, or in the families of my friends.

This I have now done with a high degree of satisfaction, in cases of both adults and children.

I have found it, as its ingredients show, a powerful remedy for colds, and pulmonary disease.

PARKER CLEVELAND, M. D.
Brunswick, Me., Feb. 5, 1847.

From an Overseer in the Hamilton Mills, in this city.

Lowell, August 10, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer: I have been cured of the worst cough I ever had in my life, by your Cherry Pictoral, and never fail, when I have opportunity, of recommending it to others. Yours respectfully, S. D. EMERSON.

☞Read the following, and see if this medicine is worth a trial. This patient had become very feeble, and the effect of the medicine was unmistakably distinct.

United States Hotel, Saratoga Springs, July 5, 1849.

Dr. J. C. Ayer—Sir: I have been afflicted with a painful affection of the lungs, and all the symptoms of settled consumption, for more than a year. I could find no medicine that would reach my case, until I commenced the use of your Cherry Pictoral, which gave me gradual relief, and I have been steadily gaining my strength till my health is well high restored.

While using your medicine, I had the gratification of curing with it my reverend friend, Mr. Truman, of Sumpter District, who had been suspended from his parochial duties by a severe attack of bronchitis.

I have pleasure in certifying these facts to you, And am, sir, yours respectfully,
J. F. CALHOUN, of South Carolina.

☞Prepared and sold by JAMES C. AYER, Practical Chemist, Lowel, Mass.

☞Sold by A. Turrell, Montrose; Lucien Scott, Great Bend, and by Druggists everywhere. 6y1

THE LIGHTNING LINE!

C. TILLMAN, Barber and Hair Dresser, returns his thanks to his numerous friends and patrons; and having, as he hopes, convinced all of the great danger and risk of cutting their throats by shaving themselves, he begs that they will discontinue that barber-ous practice, and encourage home industry by calling on him for a shave. Col. Crockett's uncle was said to be so smart that he shaved himself with sheet lightning, and C. Tillman will perform the same feat on any who prefer that to a good razor, if they will call at his shop in Searle's Hotel basement. If you don't believe it, call and see.

MORSE'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF YELLOW DOCK ROOT.

WE feel prompted by every principle of humanity, to make known to the world the Wonderful Efficacy of this Extraordinary Preparation.

Thousands have been relieved of a great amount of suffering, and many lives saved by the use of it. It is acknowledged by the best judges of medicine to be the most elegant, scientific and salutary preparation now in use, and is a seldom if ever equalled. It stands unrivalled for the cure of Erysipelas, Salt Rheum, Canker, Scrofula, and all the various diseases arising from an impure state of the blood. Also, all

Bilious Complaints,

And is used with unprecedented success in all cases of

Female Weaknesses and general Debility,

Strengthening the weakened body, giving tone to the various organs, and invigorating the entire system, and also for the cure of the Liver Complaint, Catarrh, Dyspepsia, Headache, Dizziness, Coughs, &c.

Those affected with Chronic diseases, of whatever form, will find this medicine not only pleasant to the taste, but a certain cure, if it be within the power of a remedial agent to affect their disease.

It is composed of medicines so happily combined as to tend directly to give tone to the stomach and bowels, and excite to healthy action the LIVER and the whole GLANDULAR SYSTEM; allay NERVOUS IRRITITY, and promote the free action of the LUNGS, thus rendering it applicable to all diseases of a Chronic Nature.

It is purely vegetable, and may be used in all climates and at all seasons of the year.

Prepared only by O. Morse & Co., at 2½ Maiden Lane, New York, and sold by ABEL TURRELL, Montrose.

It is put up in quart bottles. Price $1,00.
