Poisionous Tea.

It is a singular fact that a Chinese nevel drinks cold water, but thinks it distructive to health, and hates it. Uncolored ten is his beverage from morning till night—the essence of the herb drawn out in pure water, and swallowed without milk and sugar. If he travels, he stops in his chair to take his cup. not his glass.'-If he pays a visit, he is offered teas if he receives a visiter, he prefers it. Before dinner he takes his ton as the French take ovsters-as a zest. After dinner, he sips his tea as a Scotchman takes his whiskey—as a digester.—This is done not only without in juring their stomachs, but with positive advantage to their bodily health and general comfort. Yet, Englishmen will swallow tea, go to bed, turn and toss, keep awake, get up, currences taking place around them.
