To supply the wants of this mass of misery were four medical men, one of whom was the surgeon of the ship-sufficiently employed in bats take the lead of the eagle.-[Josiah looking after the crew, who at this place and season are seldom free from sickness. The ship was literally covered with prostrate forms so as to be almost unmanageable. The office cers could not get below to find their sextants and the run was made at hazard. The vessel was at sea 12 hours longer through this mischance. The worse cases were placed on the upper deck, which in a day or two became a mass of putridity. The neglected gunshot wounds bred maggots, which crawled in every direction, infecting the food of the unhappy beings on board. The putrid animal matter caused such a stench that the officers and crew were nearly overcome, and the daptain is now ill from the effects of the five days
