penation, was highly impolitic, and must of necessity, in spirit, remain a dead letter upon the statute-book. In many parts of the State, sub-committees are still acting under authority of the Directors. He would have one school, instead of a Township, constitute a school District, whose duties should be those now imposed upon Directors. And to render the system more complete, would in time have a Town Superintendent elected, and then there would be an efficient and ready line of communication between the head of the department and the most remote district in the State. He dwelt elaborately and eloquently upon the system of public instruction and the principles on which it is based, demonstrating its intimate connection with the welfare of our country and the best interests of humanity.

Prof. W. Richardson then made some remarks in regard to teachers' boarding around? He thought a social being, and should take pleasure in associating with his fellow-men. There seemed to be a general aversion in some places to boarding around; but he thought there were many advantages (as well as some disadvantages) connected with it, which could never be realized when boarding at one particular place.

Fr. Stoddard spoke in high terms of the Pennsylvania Journal, and B. F. Tewksbury distributed copies of the same. He then made a few remarks on the subject of the Pennsylvania Journal, and made a few remarks regarding the character, situation, and terms of the School Journal.

The Institute then took a short recess, during which time B. F. Tewksbury, agent for the Pa. School Journal, obtained thirty-five subscribers, being about one-third of the members of the Institute.

Afternoon session.—Teachers who were expected to teach, and desired it were examined by Prof. Richardson and Stoddard. It being near the close of the session, Dr. S. A. Richardson was called upon and said: he had enjoyed the privilege of attending several Institutes, both in this and New York State, but never had it been his fortune to meet with one in which there was more zeal and interest manifested by the members—this he was glad to see; it was an omen of happy success for our system of public instruction. He commended the Institute as a means of great and lasting good to the common schools, and he had watched the progress of their establishment with exceeding gratification.

Let teachers go on with the good work they have so nobly begun—let them carry it forward with strength and energy, and success will naturally crown their efforts. Very soon County Institutes will be established throughout the State, and then a State Institute will speedily follow. We read that the children of Israel went up once a year to worship at Jerusalem. Let teachers make Institutes their Jerusalem. Let them go once a year to worship at Jerusalem, and when we, the children of improvement are all assembled at the Great Jerusalem, O! JERUSALEM, when a time will have.

Prof. W. Richardson then invited all the members of the Institute to visit him at his residence, which invitation was accepted, and at the appointed time the Prof. received them; and

"All went merry as a marriage bell." Pleasant chats and social smiles abounded in high profusion, and

"A burst of joy each merry tongue declared." Evening Session.—Dr. S. A. Richardson delivered a lecture on the Lungs, their structure, the office they perform in sustaining life, &c. He remarked that if parents realize the alarming and fatal effects, which ill-constructed and badly ventilated school houses have upon the health of their children, they would be prevailed upon to send their children to school in a more healthy manner. Very much of the health, and the uneasiness which scholars experience, is attributable to the impure air they breathe, which arises from non-ventilation. The youth of our land are immense sufferers from this cause—years and years of valuable life are stricken off by disease which was generated in badly ventilated school rooms.

Let teachers look to this, and see that the children suffer from their care do not rest the responsibility of bequeathing their children a legacy of more value than wealth, and more to be prized than all worldly honours—health. He once journeyed with a man who prided himself upon the excellent arrangement of his habitation. He was invited to look at them, and he saw that man or beast could desire. He saw horses were in painted stalls, surrounded by beautiful curtains and ventilated in the most excellent manner. They were kept free from dust, and the fresh mountain air circulated through the apartments, imparting health and vigor to the noble horse, and in his admiration he was led to exclaim, "a merciful man is indeed merciful to his beasts." They returned to the house; the children were returned from school, and the little son was prostrate with disease. The mother in all her anxiety told the father, and asked what should be done. The father said his business demanded his presence, and he could not attend to it; she must do the best she could; and she served for the Physician if she thought proper. Thus the father who had such solicitude for the well-being of his horse, leaves his tender and dependent offspring to the mercy of Death's most cruel and relentless servants. He inquired of the mother in regard to the previous health of her son, and she assured him that he had never been unwell till he came to school. He then visited the school house, and found as he had anticipated, a musty, unventilated school room.—He returned to the mother and told her the cause of her son's illness, and assured her that to save her son she must keep him from the school. Although reluctantly she finally accepts the advice. This is but one of the many cases that daily occur throughout the length and breadth of our land.

He said much more of the highest interest and value to all, but space will not permit us to transcribe this report further. He closed with a few beautiful and appropriate remarks, expressing the warmest gratitude for the kind words shown him by every member of the Institute, and by all friends with whom he had been connected since he had sojourned in their midst. Those who listened to this address will not soon forget the deep impression made upon the audience.

On motion a Committee of three, viz: Amos B. Kent, E. F. Bailey, and W. Fairbrother, were appointed to meet with the Secretary in preparing the minutes for publication and in preparing a copy of the Report of the Institute, to be presented to the Editors of both County papers, and Pennsylvania School Journal, for insertion.

The following resolutions were then reported by the Chairman of the Committee and unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That we, as members of the Susquehanna County Teachers Institute, have been greatly benefited by the exercises of this, the first public opinion, and earnestly recommended to all members in this, an adjoining county, who feel an interest in the cause of Education, to meet with us at our next session, and participate in the superior advantages derived from this most valuable means of improvement.

Resolved, That we tender our warmest thanks to the officers of the Institute, but more particularly to the venerable Prof. Wm. Lyman Richardson, whose parental supervision, conducted to all members in this, an adjoining county, who feel an interest in the cause of Education, to meet with us at our next session, and participate in the superior advantages derived from this most valuable means of improvement.
