I believe the freesoil doctrines, if uncontaminated by the corruptions of selfish demagogues, will in time free our country from the curse and shame of slavery, and its accompanying evil, that threaten the destruction of our beloved country. With sentiments like these, laden with such hopes, bearing onward the destiny for weal or woe, of this great Union of States, I grieve to see this great principle trifled with,—dragged down to the paltry service of lazy, shiftless demagogues. Cool reflection is all that is wanted, and the Democratic ship (the people's bark of safety) rides triumphant again. The people can be trusted, they may err, but they are not corrupt, their discernment is too searching to be long deceived

Washington Correspondence.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 6, 1855.

Eds. Democrat:—

Nothing of particular interest has transpired in Congress the past week. We have had the holidays to attend to, and so the meeting of the Houses has been little more than formalities of adjournment for "three days longer."

The holidays, however, have been pretty well improved by the politicians. They have found plenty of time and material for "social speculation." The short speech which Mr. BENTON had read in the House against the reinstating of the Missouri Compromise, has formed a fruitful subject for "small talk," and many are the insinuations and reproaches cast upon the integrity and motives of the "last of the old Romans." Some declare that he has sold out his manliness in hope that the Missouri Legislature will elect him to the Senate. Others declare that it is a bold bid for the Presidency, and others still, that he has taken the only statesmanlike view of the question, and that his aspirations are now satisfied, and that he would, in no event, again be brought into public life. I do not pretend to decide who is right. One thing however is true. He has dampened the ardor of many of his warmest friends.

"Old SAM HOUSTON," with many northern men, is all the rage for the next President.—He belongs to the Know-Nothings, and is a prominent candidate of that Order, rather on the principle I suspect, of availibility. Enough is developed of the Know-Nothings, to show any honest "free soiler" that he cannot unite his principles with them. They have absorbed the Whig party of the South, entirely, as they have pretty much of the North that is of the National stripe; and, towards the free soil, or Seward whigs of the North they are peculiarly hostile. It is already found that several re-elected members, like Banks of Massachusetts, who was returned wholly on account of his free soil notions, have joined the order, and turned traitor to their former faith. The Know-Nothing movement in the nation is controlled by cunning, as well as corrupt men. When the South saw herself in trouble after the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, when she saw that the North was uniting as one man against her interests, then was thrown in this Know-nothing question to distract her counsels, and break the force of her indignation. But the most humiliating reflection is, many honest men at the North, anxious to strike a blow which should be felt at Washington, and through the southern States, have enlisted in the Know-Nothing order, giving it strength and potency thereby, and they now find they have been allured to fight the battle of their common enemy. They find now, when they had supposed the indignation of the country had been roused to such a pitch that their cause must triumph, that all at once their forces are scattered, dismayed, broken, and fettered by Know-Nothing propagandism.—The south is triumphant. She raised an issue in the North which broke the phalanx forming against her, and which has effectually disorganized the Northern forces, and paralyzed their energies. But one course now remains for free soilers to escape. They must first come out entirely from the Know-Nothings, and join in the common battle against that intolerant, and anti-republican power, till it shall be prostrated, or they must give up the contest without a struggle to maintain their principles. If they take the former course they will in the end come up stronger than ever, because they will show to the world that they are really engaged in a contest of principle. But if they take the other course, the world will ever despise them, while the whole country will be ready to proclaim their principles a heresy. All respect or confidence will justly be withdrawn from all northern free soilers who do not stand in this hour proof against this order, for they place themselves in the position of men professing to be governed by the highest and noblest impulses of religion and morality, and yet being the first to desert their principles and form a disgraceful alliance with the enemy.

It is reported here that Judge Wilmot belongs to the Order, and that his friends are endeavoring to procure his election to the Senate as its candidate. His friends here, however, are hardly prepared to believe that he has yielded to its oaths and pro-slavery aims, but many of them will be forced to believe it unless he shall soon publicly declare the falsity of the rumor, and enter the field with his old associates in arms, against their machinations, and in defence of his long-cherished doctrines. The silence of any man professing his principles, at this time, must be construed by the masses into a willingness on his part, that those principles should be sacrificed to further the ends of a party seeming likely to obtain political power.

What Ladies can do.

Messrs. Eds.:—Will you permit me thro' the medium of your paper, to express my gratification at meeting the Ladies of Great Bend and their friends on Thursday evening of last week. They met in the spacious hall of Mr. S. H. Dayton, which was generously tendered for their use,—to enjoy a social evening and partake of a sumptuous repast, which we have not seen excelled this side the metropolis. The whole thing was got up in admirable style, and there is seldom seen such an array of the beautiful and substantial as was there displayed. Notwithstanding the weather was unfavorable, a goodly number gathered around the festive board.—The room was elegantly decorated with evergreens and artificial flowers which were tastefully arranged in vines, gay festoons and the lifelike appearance of the richly furnished vases upon the tables, seemed almost to make one feel that the time of the singing of birds was near, which proved to be so as they, soon commenced, their warblings, accompanied by the sweet notes of the melodeon, much to the entertainment of the company. The abundance of delicacies prepared for the occasion might well tempt the appetite of an epicure, the only cause of regret being that double the number were not present to share the provision made for them.—Much credit is due the Ladies who originated and carried out this plan, the object of which is to procure an instrument for their church. We congratulate them upon their success.—May their husbands praise them in the gates, and their generation rise up and call them blessed. COSMOPOLITE.
