The Widow Bedoft and the Smiling Now Ready, the second Edition of The Widow Bedott Papers. The most staid and conservative Editors cannot keep their faces straight. Sars the New-York Observer :- " A volume mort full of genial humor and irresistable Yunkercharacter has nut yet been published-nut ech excepting the experiences of the renowned dam Slick. We would not thus speak highof a work of mere humor, but these Papers contain most admirable satires upon many of the vices and follies that infest religious societies, and therefore are the more free to commend the book." Says the Portland Transcript-The Widow Bedott is undoubtedly one of the most amusing characters in modern literature, and this collec-tion of her Papers cannot fail to set the public upon the broad grin."

Says the New York Evening Post:—"Rev.

Mrs. Sniffles abroad' in which a literary soirce is: described, is better done than the account of the literary party of Mrs. Leo Hunter in the Pick-

Says the Boston Evening Gazette-" We have enjoyed the book most heartily, for it provokes aughter from the commencement to the finis, and we propose to give our readers a few ex-tracts from a volume which contains harder hits kliewise! at the soft side of human nature than any volume published of late years." Says the Portland Argus-" It contains the very cream of fun-genuine fun-and if anybody can read these sketches without hearty for all kinds and degrees of hypo, and is worth Says the Boston Olive Branch- The book is one that will keep all eyes wide awake. Its grman, and is now, alas, dead. Hers were the keenest powers of satire—her drollery is inimitable. The preface is delightfully written by Alice B. Neal."

Says the New York Evangelist-" A book of genuine humor and well directed, successful sarcasm. The foibles of female character, the ugliness and absurdity of envy, detraction and match-making, and other prominent sins, are hit with great point and shrewdness."
Says the N. Y. Commercial Advertiser—"The Widow Bedott is a rival to Sam Slick, and in some respects is much the most ludicrous and mirth provoking of the two. She is made the medium of the most humorous sketches of Yankee character, which it is impossible to read without laughing immoderately." The Publisher takes the liberty of adding the following. On page 31 of the book the Widow writes as follows:

Fil never change my single lot-I think 'twould be a sin—
The inconsolable widey of Deacon Bedott Don't intend to get in afried agin."
But after her capture of Elder Sniffles, she in dites the following lines to him: "I rissilla the fair, and Shadrach the wise, Have united their fortunes in the tenderest o

And being mutually joined in the matrimonial connection. Vave bid adoo to their previous affliction."
