From Dr. Bartlett's Anglo-Saxon. SOMETHING TO REMEMBER.

There was once an abbot who owned rich monastery, and who enjoyed his possessions so gaily that he was nicknamed the "Abbot Sans Souri." As soon as he had fulfilled his religious duties he thought of nothing but taking his ease, and making other people happy. He would go and visit his neighbors—giving good advice to such as steed in need of it, cheering the downhearted with a merry joke, repeating wise saws and proverbs to the old folks, and telling amusing stories to the children; so that everybody was glad to see him; and whenever any one cried out, "Here comes the Abbot Sans Souci !" all faces brightened up just as if mer-
