Constitution and the Union As a question of expediency, after the right has been maintained, it may be wise to reflect rpon the benefits to Kansas and to the whole Union, which would result from its immediate admission into the Union, as well as the disasters which may follow its rejection. Domestic peace will be the happy consequence of its admission, and that fine Territory, hitherto torn by dissensions, will rapidly increase in population, and wealth, and speedily realize the blessings and comfort which follow agricultural and mechanical industry. The people then will be sovereign and can regulate their own affairs in their own way; if the majority of them desire to abolish domestic slavery as by its prompt admission. The will of the majority is supreme and irresistible, when expressed orderly and in lawful manner. It can unmake Constitutions at pleasure. It would be absurd to say they can impose fetters upon their own power, which they cannot afterwards remove. If they could do this, they might tie their own hands for an hundred as for ten years. These are the fundamental principles of American, freedom, and recognized in some form by every State Constitution, and if Congress in the act of adand all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit, and therefore, they have at all times the inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform or abolish their form of government, in such manner as they may think proper." The great State of New York is at this moment governed under a Constitution framed in direct opposition to the mode prescribed by the vision changing the Kansas Constitution after the year 1864, could by any possibility be construed into the prohibition to make such change previous to the period of prohivition, it would be wholly unavailing. ever assumed. Every patriot in the country had indulged the hope that the Kansas Nebraska act would put a final end to the slavery agitation, at least in Congress, which had for more than twenty years convulsed the country, and endangered the Union. This act involved great and fundamental principles, and if fairly carried into effect, will settle the question. Should the agitation be again revived, should the people of the sister States be again estranged from each other with more than former bitthe interests of Kansas are concerned, more tion. To the people of Kansas the only gractical difference between their admission or rejection, depends simply upon the fact whether they can themselves more speedily change the present Constitution, if it does not accord with the will of the majority, or frame a sec-ond Constitution to be submitted to Congress bereafter.- Even if this were a question of mere expediency, and not of right, the small difference of time, one way or the other, is not of the least importance when contrasted with the evils which must necessarily result to the whole country from the renewal of the slavery agitation. In considering this question, it should never be forgetten that in proportion to its insignificance, let the decision be what it may, so far may affect the few thousands inhabitants in Kansas, who have, from the beginning, resisted the Constitution and the law, for this very reason the rejection of the Constitution will be so much more keenly felt by the people of fourteen States of the Union where slavery is recognized under the Constitution of the United States, Again, the speedy admission of Kansas into the Union, would restore peace and quie: to the whole country. Aiready the affairs of the Territory have engrossed an undue proportion of the public attention, have sadly affected the friendly relations of the people of the States with each other, and alarmed the fears of patriots for the safety of the Union.-Kanis no triffing consideration—we shall then be enabled to withdraw the troops from Kansas competition of 1849.
