WASHINGTON, JAB. 13 .- As many people wonder concerning the alleged determination of the Republicans of the House not to permit the tariff law to be amended this winter if they can possible stave off such action, we may not improperly say that it is generally understood among their outside friends here, that they have come to this conclusion under the belief that it will be best for the political future of their party to prevent the wishes of Pennsylvania from being gratified, with reference to the duties on iron, until after the next Presidential election, if they can compare that point. They are playing a game as bold as deen in this matter.
