An Exciting Sen Story of the Revolution ! tle,' said the captain, still keeping his glass SEAWAIF; OR, THE TERBOR OF THE COAST.

CHAPTER IV.

When Seawaif left the presence of fair Kate canvas. Cringle, he met her father, who accompanied him down to his boat, in vain trying to-find out what Kate had wanted him for. out what Kate had wanted him for. The young capthin spring into his boat, amid the murmured good wishes of hundreds of citizens who had gathered there to see the privateer go to see, and in a few moments he.

was on board of his vessel. With a clear, but bugle-like voice, which needed no trumpet, the young commander shouted : Man the capstan bars, lads, and run the anchor up with a will. Stand by the jib and flying jib hillards-lay the head yards aback!" His orders were obeyed readily; and in a few moments, the second officer, who stood on the forecastle looking over the bows cried: 'She's broken ground, sirl' Very well tir-run up the jib and flying-jib, and haul the sheets to starboard-man the top gallant and top-sail sheets and halliards ! Round with the capstand, men, and 'run the anchor up to the bows!'

A momnet later, and the head-sails up, the veering bow of the schooner proved her to be all aweight, and then came the order : Sheet home, and hoist away top-sail and top-gallant sails !

This was done; and as the fore-and-alt sails. already up, filled, the schooner began to gather headway. Then, as she fell off before he wind, which was fair out of the harbor, her square sails filled, and she shot ahead with increased velocity. The crowd on shore looking with delight upon the splendid vessel, and gladdened, too, at the thought of her errand, reut the air with cheers; while Mr. Cringle, taking upon himself the part of gunner, fired an impromptu salute from a single gun, which was kept upon the wharf to be used as a warning signal if the British approached. The 'Tyrannicide' replied to this by a sa lute of seventeen guns-her whole complement.

-' That's what I call a darned waste o' powder !' said a pinched-faced, dried-up, anatomy of a man, whose thread-bare clothes, little eyes, and long; greedy tailons of fingers, spoke the miser out and out.

It isn't your powder, Mozes Gelson,' said Mr. Cringle, rather sharply. 'If it was, it wouldn't be likely to be in a vessel destined to fight for liberty!' 'Tush-tush! What is this 'liberty' to us?-the war is ruining trade, and soon we'll be as poor as rats?' said the miser pettishly. 'It is a pity that such mean curses as yon wern't poor ; you're too stingy to live! If rou only had your due, you'd get a good-ducking in a horse pond!' cried out Mr. almost abeam. Cringle, so angrily and so loudly, that his words were heard by the crowd, and probably found echo in their hearts; for they instanuly shouted : Let's duck the old miser-to the goose pond with the old tory ! And seizing the terrified wretch they dragged him roughly toward a pond of muddy water near the residence of the merchant, and soon would have put their intention into execution, had not Kate Cringle, who saw their actions, stepped out upon the balcony, and in a clear, musical voice, which cried out, reached every ear:

Shame, men-shame! to treat an old man so. He is weak and helpless; let him go and save your strength for a nobler pur-

'Tarnal thunder! you'rs not goin' to run from one sloop o'-war, are you, sirl' asked the figurement, in agonized wonder. Get out and rig two spare, with iron e-nough on them to sink them for drags; drop one over each quarter, and ask no impertinen questions, Mr. Doolittle,' said the captain netly.

'I beg your pardon, ar, a hundred timesthought you was a goin' to run!' said the now delighted officer, as be hastened to obey the Double-shot with grape and canister-gun ners to your stations!' cried the captain, now, determinedly. 'Men, make no noise when I announce it, but within an hour that sloopof war shall strike her flag, or we'll go down with ours flying! When she is taken, the merchant-men well be easy prizes. Had they not been gautioned, the men would have cheered so loudy as to have been heard on board the sloop-of-war. After the drags were ngged and lowered over the side, held by stout hawsers, and not seen because, sunk beneath the water, the schooner did not go more than three knots, although-under full spread of canvas-sh seemed to be running away from her antago nist, which now could be seen coming up band over hand, her decks crowded with men, and her ports showing a battery of twenty four guns.

On she came with, the red cross of St.George flaunting from her peak, until she was within néarly almile of the schooner when she fired a shot from one of her bow guns. 'Show them our colors and name!' cried the young captain, while his pale face flashed with a smile of terrible loy. It was done in an instant; but the vessel's head was not changed, nor a sail touched. Rapidly the Englishman closed up, heading a little to leeward, so as to rauge under her larboard beam. 'Crouch well behind the bulwarks, men stand by your larboard guns, but do not touch a match until the order comes from my lips; depress your guns, so as to take her between wind and water? Sail- trimmers, stand to your sheets and braces, and be ready for orders." These orders given, Captain Sewaif took his position on the larboard side of the quarter-deck, and with ill-concealed delight saw the Englishman range along until she was

'Haul down your colors, or Ill sink you Strike, you Yankee rebel, strike !" shouted the English captain, who stood on the poop of his vessel in full uniform, steadying himself by holding on to the mizzen rigging. I'm just going to strike-not my colors, but you!' cried Sewaif, sarcastically, and instantly giving the order to pour in his whole broadside

It was done with terrible effect, for the British had not anticipated resistance from a Thankful for the liberal patronage hitherto reebel whom they supposed to le using his heat afforts to escape, and were huddled along the deck on the side next to the schooner, and were cut down in fearful swaths.
