Wale of the Empire under Peter the Great. CHAPTER L

The time at which we open our story is mid-winter, and towards the close of the seventeenth century. Russia is the scene. In the suburbs of Moscow, and very near the river Muskwa, stood an humble cot, which betrayed a neatness of arrangement and show of taste that more than made up for i's smallness of size. Back of the cot was an artisan's shop, and other out-buildings. This shop was devoted to the manufacture of fire-arms, mostly. Some swords, and other edged weapons, were made here upon special appli-

The master of this tenement was the hero of our tale, Ruric Nevel. We find him standing by his forge, watching the white smoke as it curled up towards the throat of the chimney. He was a young man, not over three-and-twenty, and possessed a frame of more than ordinary symmetry and muscular developement. He was not large-not above a medium size, but a single glance at the swelling chest, the broad shoulders, and the sine my ridges of the bare arms, told at once that he was master of great physical power. His father had been killed in the then late war wish the Turks, and the son, leaving his mother with a sufficiency of sustenance, went to Spain soon after the bereavement. There he found work in the most noted armories; and now, well versed in the trade, he had returned to his native city to follow his calling, and support his mother.

Near by stood a boy—Paul Peepoff—a bright, intelligent lad, some fifteen years of age, who had bound himself to the gunmaker for the purpose of learning the art. Claudia- Nevel. Ruric's mother, was noble looking woman, and the light of her atill handsome countenance was never-brighter than when gazing upon her boy. She had a thankful, loving beart, and a prayerful, hopeful soul. "It is snowing again, faster than ever," remarked Paul, as he took his teat at the supper table, in company with the

'Ah,' returned Ruric, resting his knife a few momen's while he bent his car to listen to the voice of the storm. 'I had hoped 'twould snow no more for the present. The snow is deep enough now. And how it blows !

"Never mind," spoke the dame, in a trus" fol, easy tone, it must storm when it listeth, and we only can thank God that we have shelter, and pray for those who have

'Amen!' responded Ruric, fervently. The meal was at length exten, and the table set back, and shortly afterwards Paul retired

His mother having observed these fits of abstraction, became uneasy and pressed Ruric to tell ber what it was over which he was so constantly and so moodily brooding. Being thus urged, Ruric confessed that it was of Rosaland Valdai (the e-phan daughter of a nobleman, and now the ward of O.ga, the powerful and haughty Duke of Tula) he was thinking. Rucie's father, and the father of Ro-alind, had been comrades in arms in their youth, and their children had been playmates. But when the elder Nevel was slain in battle. Ruric questioned him closely as to whether he had ever met him before, but the Monk replied evasively, and after saving that in case the gunmaker should ever, in any great emergency, need a friend, that he might apply to him, he took his leave.

Towards the middle of the afternoon, jusas Ruric had finished tempering some parts of a gun-lock, the back-door of his shop was opened, and two men entered. They were young man, dressed in costly furs, and both of them stout and good-looking. The gunmaker recognized them as the Count Cound Damonoff and his friend Stephen Urzen.

The man thus addressed viewed the gunmaker a few moments, and he seemed to conclude that he had better to avoid a personal encounter. . Conrad Damonoff slowly rose to his feet and gazed into his antigonist's face a few moments in silence. His own face was deady pale, and his whole frame quivered. Ruric Nevel, he said, in a hissing, maddened tone, 'you will hear from me. I can overlook your plebeian stock.'

And with this be turned away. Paul, said the gunmaker, turning to his boy, after the men had gone, not a word of

Now, thought he, is the time to call on Rosalind; and as soon as he had eaten his breakfast he prepared for the visit. He dressed well and no man in Moscow had a not let look when the du-t of toil was removed from his brow and garb.

He took a hoise and sledge, and started off for the Kremlin, within which the Duke sion of it. resided.

Were I to mention the sum of money he was once offered for the largest one, you would hardly credit it.

After this Ruric gave Paul a few directions about the work, promising to be back before pight.

Just then Oren drove up to the door. Ruric -was all ready. His mother was i the kitchen. He went to her with a smile apon his face. He put his arms about her and drew her to his busom. God bless you, my mother. I shall come back.' He said this and then he kissed

TO THE PUBLIC

OME Merchants publish a few low prices, so or the price of a few low priced articles, as an inducement to persons to make their purchases of them, under the presumption that eyers thing is equally low. Without taking space in the public papers to enumerate prices, I wish it distinctly understood, that I will sell Goods as low for the quality as they can be bought in any other Store in this place or county. Baits and Hooks not used. Purchasers will generally find good qualities of Articles at Turkell's, and in Drugs. Medicines, Paints, Oils, and Dre Stuffs, the very best, and the assortments full The Fancy Goods department is also extensive. Fancy Goods Department is also extensive. Also, choice Family Groceries, Crockery, Wall Paper, Jewelry, Perfumery, &c. In short nearly everything usually kept in country stores. As I deal in many departments of trade, and have more Articles than I can well enumerate in the limits of a Newsjaper, I shall not attempt it; neither will it be necessary, under these cir-cumstances, to fill a column with necess re-petitions and blanks. The people are invited to call and examine for themselves.
