Erom the National Argu. s. The Bogus Convention. 'Last Wednesday was marked by an event. in the political history of Pennsylvania which | together in accordance with the time honorwill not soon be forgotten. For the first time since the Democratic party had an existence Taperiod of more than fifty years-men pro-fielding to love its principles, and who spoke people and represented them. Each and in its name described in State Convention every county, township, ward and precinct to destroy its organization and repudiate its time-honored action. Such a movement, insignificent at it was inj numeral strength and personal character, is yet worthy of more than a passing notice. The treason has assumed a tangible shape, and although it may amount to no more than the rebellion of Wat Tyler or the treachery of Benedict Arnold, it is the duty of the honestapublic to treat it as it descrees, without restraint, and dnawed by nominated a ticket of worthy and competent

So common is his propensity that the saying, "the worst rogue always turns Satan'sevidence,"has becomean axiom. Such conduct marked peculiarly the course of those who occur ied leading positions in the bogus Convention. John W. Forney, who pretends, in his new-paper, and in private conversation, to be a Democrat. . wedded to all the principles of Democraev, no sooner found himself a leader in the midst of a political rabble who were ready to bay in chorus with the signal yelp of any leading hound, than he threw off the mask, and propagated dectrines which his coward heart would single have shrunk from. George Lauman, a man whose whole career had been steeped in iniquity, was a chief of the swell man gang; and John Hickman, the "ditte" of the Chevalier, was another. Alexander McKinner, a man possessing many good traits of character, but who, unfortunately, has never much less desertion to the ranks of the combeen able to keep in a straight political path mon enemy. There is a marked difference for a year at a time, was drawn into the nauseous mæelstrom. Lawrence Cantwell, -another-good-hearted man, but erratic politician, followed his example. These, with a few others of like reputations, formed the nuccleus of the pack over which the Chevalier cracked his whip, and they were surrounded by "as beggarly set of runners as ever wakened an echo." Not one of the crowd had political intelligence enough to ask whether a suggestion or a resolution was right or wrong, but they followed the lead of their bell-wether with as much precipitancy and beedlessness as ever characterized the movements of a flock of sheep. oceedings do not, therefore, strike us with any actorishment. They denounced President Bachanan because he had not spaid them with pationage to do otherwise. They praised Gov. Packer because he was. "hail fellow well mei" with them in their apostacy and corruption. They flattered Sens or Douglas because they desire to hang to him, as the monkeys in South America bang op to each others tails to be carried -over the water They agitated the slavery question because that is the political pabulum upon which they feed their treason. They repudiated the late Democratic Convention and its nominees, because the first spurned them as destroying parasites; and the last refused any alliance with them. Such in brief, was their course; such is the of opinion at the hands of the Convention, zevenge of John W. Forney for not being Postmaster General by President
