Against this I put in the following plea:

1. There is a maxim which in its time and place, contains as good and valid a law, at least as that of epediency. It is that submission and forbearance may cease to be virtues. The time may and does come, when property and life are the principles of true liberty enlighten the of no account, but to be offered up ou thealtar | nation." or justice and liberty. Patrick Henry gave utterance to this decrine when he cried "give me liberty or give me death." The Colonies responded to it, and rallied to arms. Considering of an oppressive government, without success, until, in-their opinion, " forbearance had ceased to be a virtue." They said death was preferable to such oppressive, and ignoble burdens; and resolved to take that alternative, if fail, as reasonably they might expect they should, of liberty. They did not mean to say simply, fit

2. But secondly.—Temporary defeat may be necessary to ultimate success. Apparent fail-present amount of true courage. The sacrifice of a few whose noble daring may lead them in advance of their comrads, may be needful to educate and discipline the remainder, for the contout and victory. Leonidas and his three hundred Spartans at Thermopyle, furnishes an example in point. Abundance more of thom may be found in the history of our own country. The massacre at Boston, where Crispus Mattuck, a colored man, fought for the rights of Americans, Bunker Hill, Lexington, Concord, and a host of other places, come up with their witnesses that failures are successes; and defeats victories.--Who in the light of such examples, can say, surely, that the taking of Harper's Ferry at the sacrifice of Brown and his comrads, is not a defeat pregnant with the glory of success? -that ultimate results may not prove, that the sword descended from the great Washington, rightfully and ominously came into the hands of Brown? Defeats, again, may be needful to show the weaknesses as well as the strength of an enemy. Here Brown's failure has already proved a success. Why all this parade of military-
