LADY FRANKLIN:
Fold thy hands—thy work is over!
Cool thy watching eyes with tears;
Let thy poor heart, overwrought,
Rest alike from hopes and fears—
Hopes that saw with sleepless vision
One sad picture fading slow,
Fears that followed vague and nameless,
Lifting back the veils of snow.
For thy brave one, for thy lost one,
Trustest heart of woman weep!
Owning still the love that granted
Unto thy beloved sleep.
Not for him that hour of terror,
When, the long ice-battle o'er,
In the sunless day his comrades
Deathward trod the Polar shore.
Spared the cruel cold and famine,
Spared the fainting heart's despair—
What but that could mercy grant him?
What but that has been thy prayer?
Dear to thee that last memorial,
From the cabin side the sea;
Evermore the month of roses
Shall be sacred time to thee!
Said it is the mournful year thee
O'er his slumbers may not wave;
Said it is the English day,
May not blossom on his grave.
But his tomb shall storm and winter
Shape and fashion year by year—
Pile his mighty mausoleum
Block by block and tier on tier.
Guardian of its gleaming portal
Shall his stainless banner be;
White by love, a sweet memorial,
Hovers o'er the winter sea.
SPEAK NO ILL.
Nay, speak no ill! a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And soft to breathe each tale we've heard
Is for beneath a noble mind.
Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.
Give us the heart that faint would ean,
Would fain another's fault efface;
How can it please our human pride
To prove humanity but base?
No! let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler sentiment of man;
Be earnest in the search of good,
And speak of all the best we can.
Then speak no ill, but lenient be
To other failings as your own;
If you're the first to fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.
For life is but a passing day,
No lip may tell how brief its span;
Then, oh! the little time we stay,
Let us speak of all the best we can.

The Old House in Judon Strasse.
THE REWARD OF INTEGRITY.
In one of the most distinguished quarters of Frankfurt-on-the-Main was the street called Judon Strasse, or Jews' Street. Although in the very heart of the city, it was quiet and retired, and presented but a small number of the busy residents of Frankfurt. In one of the houses dwelt a Jew, whose name was Ben Heber. He was a man of an Eastern Princess, and beautiful as only her own race can be, in the wealth and brilliancy of her deep black eyes and raven hair—distinctly marked by her peculiar purple tint that gleamed over all in the sun's rays, just as that gleamed over the ruyal's neck. Ben Heber's wife was as good as she was beautiful. Their house was neat, and beautifully ordered; although the furniture was all of a simple form, it was made of rare old wood, that would grow bring its weight in gold. One closet was devoted to sets of different patterned Dresden china, the heir-loom of his house, and who had been impoverished, and who were glad to see the money that they brought. Ah! how few could recede their. This closet was often exposed to strangers, and its wealth of beautiful cups and plates was the theme of many lips, as it was the admiration of the children of Ben Heber. They, indeed, were never tired of gazing on the paintings and the gilding that enriched the china.
Although the outer closet was thus fearfully exposed, few would have imagined that behind its seemingly secure back there was an inner one that contained princely treasures in gold and diamonds. This was the true closet, so constructed, that the closest suspicion would not reveal its existence; and in it were hidden, not the treasures that extravagance had pawned and for which the worthy Jew was receiving profits, but simply those which had been entrusted to his integrity to keep, and for which he would never be paid.
One night when the family was about retiring to rest a faint knock was heard at the door, and was answered by the master of the house. A gentleman, plain and simple in his dress, and carrying nothing, but even his cane wherewith to defend himself, appeared on the steps. His person was wholly unknown to the Jew, and it seemed that his words which he was receiving for him by proxy. He ushered his visitor to the room, where his wife was still sitting as he left her, in front of the famous closet, which stood with its wide glass doors quite open. At first the stranger seemed half disposed to object to the presence of her superb husband; but when she turned her superb head and acknowledged his presence by a bow, while her grave and serene countenance relaxed into a smile, he seemed content that she should stay and witness his business with her husband. This was soon unfolded. The visitor was a German prince, who, for some political or personal reason, was forced to flee from Frankfurt. He had heard of the quiet and uprightness of the man with whom he had come to deal, and he wished to place all his gold in the world under his charge, if he would accept the trust.

"I wish only," said the prince, "to retain enough for my expenses to a foreign land. Once there, it will go hard if a prince cannot find something on which to exercise his wits sufficiently to obtain a living. If nothing offers me, I shall shape my course to that end toward the setting sun, where, I am told, the fugitives of the world are gathered, and where every man is as good as his neighbor."
The Jew promised, and asked when he would bring his treasures, so that he might be able to appoint a private meeting to arrange their business.
"I have them here," said the prince, "and I wish to have them all deposited in your hands. You are a man of honor, and I shall have no objection to your examining them, and to my taking account of them, if you wish." The Jew, who had been examining the prince's treasures, and who had seen the gold and diamonds, and who had seen the prince's wits, and who had seen the prince's countenance, and who had seen the prince's hands, and who had seen the prince's feet, and who had seen the prince's hair, and who had seen the prince's eyes, and who had seen the prince's nose, and who had seen the prince's mouth, and who had seen the prince's ears, and who had seen the prince's fingers, and who had seen the prince's toes, and who had seen the prince's hands, and who had seen the prince's feet, and who had seen the
