MONTROSE, PA., THURSDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1860.

The Leaves are Falling. Silently the leaves are falling.
One by one they fade and die,
Silently they speak to us,
Man, thou too, wert made to die

And when our memory wanders hack, Through its chimbers dim by time, There we see the forms of loved ones, Who have gone to another clime

And the hopes we fondly therished Fondest hopes perhaps of life, Dead we see them like the leaves; On the battle field of life, Silently they speak to us,

But now their voice is sad and r id so solemn are their lays, they seem to chant the requisin departed happy days.
