Scatter sweet flowers on the Seasons' tomb For oh, they perish in their early bloom--And o'er their dust this requiem be sung-

Oh, Spring was very beautiful and gay, When April mild and rosy fingered May Ramble along the many babling brooks. And gather wild flowers in their shady nooks, And waving them in gladness in the air, Scattered their fragrant dew-drops everywhere, Beneath whose silver spray the delicate bloom Of Flora filled the air with rich perfume. Slender and gentle and surpassing fair

Was blue-eyed Summer with her golden hair, Sweet voiced as is the murmur of a dove, While every look was eloquent with love. Where blooms the wild rose by the mountain spring. In whose clear waves the robin dips his wing-Where blustering berries tempt the longing eyes, Like the forbidden fruit of Paradiec, And the sweet mocking-bird, in carol gray, Enchants the listener with his wondrous lay-There, in the silence of her shady bowers, The Summer goals passed the dreamy hours, Death came and faid his hand upon her brow And in eternal night she sleepeth now.

Next Autumn came in robe of gorgeous dyes A queen-although the Bourbon star had set-Beholding with a prond, unwavering faith The scaffold and the officer of death Mourning-not her own early doom for she Knew well the hollowness of majesty-

But grieving that the beantiful and gay In her bright train were doomed to pass away. So Autumn died, but, on her couch of death. Was balmy with the jasmine's odorous breath. And every wind harp breathed its hollow moan For the sweet soul that had forever flown.

But lo, whilst mourning for the seasons fled, A phanix from the ashes of the dead Rising in triumph, and the new born year, Round Time's vast orb begins his swift' career. The tising sunbeams herald his advance And break on every hill a golden lance : Heaven plants her banners at the castern gate, To greet the monarch as he comes in state And the lond harps of ocean and of earth, Resound in strains of revelry and mirth. Welcome to earth, thou youngest child of Time, Unwarped by wrong, unspotted by a crime, Oh, may the blooming vigor of the youth Ripen in wisdom, purity and truth, Spare in thy flight the innocent and gay. And scatter pleasure's garlands in thy way, Repress the insolence of lawless might, Aud make the wrong submissive to the right; Uphold the patriot and strike down the hand That waves the traitor's sword or treason's brand, And with the hand of charity redress Bach form of human woo and wretchedness, So that the annals of all coming time Shall write thee as the Golden Age +aldime.
