New Hampshire Election.

The Democrats have elected one of the Congressmen, while the popular vote of the State shows a handsome Democratic majority for Governor, which was foolishly squandered upon two Democratic candidates, thus throwing the election into the Legislature. Nevertheless, it is a plendid Democratic victory.

Never have the administration made such desperate attempts to carry a state. stronghold. They fought with vindictive desperation-calling the majority "traitors,3" "copperheads," and threatening them with hanging. But the administration has been signally beaten even in a New England state, which, since there was a Republican party, has never, till now failed to elect their entire ticket. N. Hampshire, which, in the presidential election, gave Lincoln a majority of 11,- publican majority of at least seven thousand, showing, in that small state, a repubican loss since 1860 of nearly twenty thousand votes.

The majority of the lower branch of the Legislature is republican, but that results from the unequal apportionment of the representatives among the population .--The vote for governor proves that a large I need not take time to show ; but their majority of the people are Democratic .--The redemption of New England, so auspiciously begun in New Hampshire, will be still more cheeringly carried forward or otherwise, he can get his clutches on. in Connecticut, next month.
