

entire length but it will always remain untouched, the miners' care not take it for it is a part (and a great part) of this rock, which is their only protection against the sea, and which has so far been worked out here (for the thickness is limited to a depth of three feet only between the water and the gallery in which we now stand. No one knows what might be the consequence of another day's labor with the pick axe on any part of it.

Mutton the Meat for the Millions.
Mutton is the best meat we can eat, best, as being the most delicious, if well cooked. We do not mean the woolly, greasy mutton of the Merinos and Saxons, nor the coarse, stringy, talowy, though very economical mutton of the Leicester, Cotswold, and other long wool sheep. When we say mutton is the most delicious of domestic meats, we have the flesh of the middle wools in mind—that is, of South downs, per excellence, and Cheviots, Hampshire-downs, Shropshire-downs, and others of their kind in a less degree. Mutton is more economical, than pork or beef. A farmer can seldom have fresh beef unless he has so large a number of hands that they can consume a quarter before it will spoil. More grain is required to make a pound of pork than a pound of mutton. It is more healthful food than pork; fat mutton will keep longer, and a family of ordinary size can dispose of a small sheep before the mutton will spoil, even in quite warm weather. Besides, if a farmer is on friendly terms with his neighbors, he can easily sell, or lend one or two quarters. By a system of exchanging fresh meats, several families may be supplied with that most excellent quality at all seasons of the year, at a very cheap rate. Mutton is more nutritious, and will consequently give a laborer more strength than pork; people of staid habits, and children in particular, will feel better, accomplish more, and be more healthy when they eat mutton than if they eat much pork or even beef.

Conspicuous is an important consideration at all times, on the farm or elsewhere. When fresh mutton is wanted, one man can dress a sheep or lamb in a few minutes; while much longer time is required to butcher a beef or a hog. Nothing is lost in making mutton, and it costs comparatively nothing. The wool will usually cover all the cost of keep during a year, and often that of fattening too. Taking this view, which is a fair one, no one can fail to perceive that mutton is the cheapest meat that can be raised. Small families can eat and dry one or both hind quarters, or cook a quarter and eat it cold. A quarter of lamb after it has been cooked, may be kept ten or twelve days, and still be good. Farmers should learn to prepare their own meat, and not sell their animals to butchers, who sell them the meats for their own tables at exorbitant prices. Furthermore, a great many people who have only a garden or small farm, can often fatten a few sheep during the winter, and thus have better meat, at a much cheaper rate than if they purchase it.

Swine's Flesh.
Under the above heading a correspondent of the Kingston (N. Y.) Journal says:
In the last issue of your paper it is stated that the Jewish nation seldom suffer from cholera, and this exemption is placed in connection with the fact that they eat no pork. This immunity from cholera is but a title of the blessings gained by the Hebrews by abstaining from the use of swine's flesh. In an experience of nearly a quarter of a century, and after much observation and enquiry, the writer has never known a Jew to suffer from cholera, consumption, or tape worm. The sufferings and deaths from the first two diseases, or forms of the same disease, so common among the pork eating nations of the earth, are unknown among the children of Israel. Place these facts in connection with this, that the hog is the only domestic animal that suffers and dies from cholera, and it speaks volumes. Your readers have all heard of "measly" pork; but they may not know that these meats are pure, deadly cholera; and that they are never found in beef, mutton, veal, or lamb. Nor is it generally known that hereditary consumption and cholera are one and the same disease; and that the most common forms of insanity are owing to the development of scrofulous tubercles in the brain. The seeds of these terrible maladies are transmitted from parent to child in the form of minute grains of tubercles deposited chiefly in the lungs and brain, and as the unhappy offspring of such parents progress in life, these tubercles become inflamed and enlarged, ending in consumption, if the lungs are the suffering organs; and in softening of the brain and insanity when that organ is the seat of the disease. Sometimes the poison of cholera is thrown out upon the skin in the form of tumors; ulcers, "fever sores," salt rheum, etc.; in which cases life is often prolonged at the expense of constant misery and suffering.
