For the Montrose Democrat.

The Great Conflict, Between Democracy and Abolitionism—Or between Liberty and Despotism.

In the orthodox anti-slavery paper quoted in the last number of this history, was an editorial article dated March 10th, 1863, entitled, "Consolidation or the Republic," which is as follows:

"The Republics of Greece perished from internal dissension. At the outset of our career we formed a Confederacy.—Having gained our independence, it was necessary to secure a more perfect unity. Our fathers discerning the necessities of the future, founded an E Pluribus Unum. The Constitution they adopted, converted us from many nations into one nation.—By the adoption of the Constitution, the States surrendered their separate sovereignty in all matters pertaining to the common welfare and general government of the nation. Yet some traces of the confederate system were still allowed to remain. No provision was made for remedying injustice, or revising the action of the States in matters pertaining exclusively to themselves. If their laws were partial, oppressive, or even immoral, it does not appear that Congress had the power to interfere. If the fathers had insisted on giving such a power, it is probable the Constitution would never have been adopted. As it was, several of the States objected to the instrument, unless accompanied with amendments. These amendments, materially restricting the powers of Congress, were adopted by the people almost simultaneously with the original document. Jefferson substituted the doctrine of State sovereignty for State rights, and formed the Republican or Democratic party, in opposition to the Federalists of that day, who were for clothing the central government with the largest powers."

Every day's happiness of the people of the United States from that day to the day when this war commenced, is owing to the Democratic party. And this war upon the part of those who are now in open enmity with President Johnson, was a war of Federalism upon the Democratic principles which Jefferson, Madison and Mason, with other friends of Liberty, succeeded in engrafting into the Constitution, against the most violent opposition of the Federalists, who wanted a kingly government from the first. Jefferson was in France at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, but he wrote to the friends of a free government, almost daily, describing the true Constitution he wanted established for the people of America. The following letter upon the subject referred to in the extract above, is here inserted, to show his solicitude for the liberties of his country:

"PARIS, July, 1788.

"TO JAMES MADISON:

"I sincerely rejoice at the acceptance of our new Constitution, by nine States. It is a good canvas, in which some strokes only want re-touching. What these are, I think are sufficiently manifested by the general voice from North to South, which call for a bill of rights. I have a right to nothing which another has a right to take away. The people say "we are willing to give to your federal government such and such powers, but we wish at the same time to have such and such fundamental rights secured to us. To say, as Mr. Wilson does, that a bill of rights was not necessary, because all is reserved in the case of the general government which is not given, while in the particular ones, all is given which is not reserved, might do for the audience to which it was addressed, for the reverse of this might just as well have been said, and it is opposed to strong inferences in the body of the instrument, as well as from the omission of the clause contained in our present confederation, which has made the reservation in express terms. I hope, therefore, a bill of rights will be formed, to guard the people against the federal government, as they are already guarded against the State governments."

Jefferson knew the Federal party well enough already to desire the protection of the people against their tyranny. One thing especially was the great desire of his heart, and that was to give the American people liberty of conscience, and freedom from persecution against the puritans of New England, as will be proven as this history proceeds, and that is the true reason why all the puritan ministers in the United States from that day to this, have denounced the Democracy of our country.

Had it not been for the Democratic party, the Puritans of New England could still have whipped and banished the Baptists; they could have fined the Episcopalians for non-attendance upon their worship, and burned their prayer-books. They could have hung the Quakers, cut off their ears, or have bored their tongues with a red-hot iron. But Democrats said, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof," and the Puritans were compelled to keep their hands off from every denomination, and their whippings, finings, and imprisonments of the different sects were at an end, until they get control again, and in overthrowing Democracy, obtain the power to expunge these amendments from our Constitution.

To show how jealous the people were of surrendering their liberties into the hands of a general government, we give the letter of a governor of Rhode Island to Congress, "giving reasons why that State did not accede to the Union."

"State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations in General Assembly, Sept. Session, 1789. To the President, the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Eleven United States of America, in Congress assembled: The people of this State seek by this memorial to show the hazards we have run, the hardships we have endured, the treasure we have spent, and the blood we have lost together in one common cause, and especially the object we had in view, the preservation of our liberty. The people of the State, from its first settlement, have been accustomed and strongly attached to a Democratic form of government. They have viewed in the new Constitution, an approach, though but small, toward that form of government with which we have lately dissolved our connection, at so much hazard and expense of life and treasure. Can it be thought strange then, that with these impressions, they should wait to see what further checks and securities would be agreed to, and established by way of amendments, before they would adopt it as a Constitution of government for themselves and posterity? These amendments have already, we believe, afforded some relief to the minds of the people of this State. We are sensible of the extremes to which Democratical government is sometimes liable, but we esteem them temporary and partial evils, compared with the loss of liberty and the rights of a free people. We feel ourselves attached by the strongest ties of friendship, of kindred, and of interest to our sister States.

JOHN COLLINS."

When it is remembered that Rhode Island was founded by a martyr of the New England Puritans, who was banished from their presence for contending for religious liberty, it is no wonder that the people of his State should stand in dread of Federalism. Had it not been for these amendments, making the Constitution thoroughly Democratic, it is probable the Union would never have been formed.—The authority quoted above says:

"If the fathers had insisted in giving Congress the power to interfere in the internal affairs of a State, it is probable the Constitution would never have been adopted. As it was, the several States objected to the instrument, unless accompanied with amendments, materially restricting the power of Congress. Jefferson formed the Democratic party in opposition to the Federalists, who were for clothing the central government with the largest powers. But the South, in striking for State sovereignty, which they had not, have lost what they had—their State rights! We shall never be again as we once were. A revolution has passed over us, and the lines that marked our thirty-four States are well nigh obliterated. The Republic is consolidated. The Union as it was, has forever passed away. We rejoice in the change. We rejoice to see our government consolidated into a strong, a vigorous, a just and righteous government.—The jewel will yet shine. The cutting of the diamond will bring out its radiant beauty."

Alas for the hopes of these poor Federalists, who were so rejoiced that the Union had passed forever away! Alas for the jewel so long dimmed by Jefferson and the Democratic party of other days, that it was not even now permitted to shine! Alas for the diamond which they had prepared for the brow of the monarch, that no cutting was allowed to bring out its radiant beauty!

Andrew Johnson, a patriot of the school of Washington, of Jefferson, of Madison and Monroe, dashed the crown which was proffered him by the Federal party from his brow, and says to them:

"My policy is to restore all the States to their original relations to the Federal government of the United States. Washington presided over the body that formed the Constitution under which all the States entered into this glorious Confederacy. My policy is the restoration of the Union of the States as it was designed by the Father of his country. Washington is embalmed in the hearts of all who love free government. Our only safety is in a strict adherence to, and preservation of the Constitution of our fathers, which is the palladium of our civil and religious liberty. Let us cling to it as the mariner clings to the last plank when the night and the tempest close around him, and our government will be restored in its pristine purity. 'The Federal Union—it must be preserved.'"

No wonder these traitors ridicule and denounce "my policy," which is in such direct opposition to their own. Mr. Seward says:

"When the time shall come when there shall be a President who will accept the power [these Federalists] offered to President Johnson, then the time will have arrived for the rolling of an Imperial Throne into the White House, and surrounding it with Imperial Guards."

The hopes and plans of these lovers of Monarchy, are now to keep the door shut against the Southern States, until a Louis Napoleon can be placed in the White House, to sit on their Imperial Throne and rule as a Despot over their consolidated Republic, while the friends of Liberty are ready to fight, if need be, for the Union founded by Washington, who is still revered by President Johnson, whose voice reechoes the eulogy pronounced upon the character of the Father of our country, by all the early patriots of America, that he was "First in War, First in Peace, and First in the hearts of his countrymen."
