

The November Elections.

On Tuesday last elections were held in twelve States, viz:

New York, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas and Nevada. In all these States members of Congress were elected. Governors were elected in New York, Massachusetts, Delaware, Michigan, Kansas, and Nevada, together with members of Legislature and other State officers. Altogether ninety members of Congress were chosen, and the choice of five United States Senators will depend upon the State Legislatures.

New York was the only State which attracted considerable attention, from being closely contested. The Democrats gain handsomely, but only enough to reduce the disunion majority to about one-half or one-third of what it was last year—leaving Fenton's majority, as two years ago, about as large as the negro vote.

Maryland, quite unexpectedly, in spite of the disunion tyranny, which imprisoned the new Police Commissioners, and kept the election under control of radicalism, gave a sweeping Union majority, sufficient to replace ex-rebel Radical Creswell, with a Democratic U. S. Senator.

Delaware still stands by the Union, and elects the Democratic ticket.

The other States vote about as last year, except that the disunionists lose in some quarters on their majorities, and the Democrats gain a few members of Congress, with a few close districts to hear from officially.

These results are not what they should be; but too many people have voted under the impulse of passion, and the corruptions and deceptions practiced by the Radicals. A majority would hardly vote deliberately for disunion, but so the result is recorded, and will remain so until the people see the error and correct it. That this result will follow, careful observers can readily see; for the Democratic party never was stronger; more determined, or better able to fight on the battle with the radical issue of disunion.

The disunion fund is about exhausted, their source of power is daily slipping from their grasp, their basis of deception gone; while we have two years in which to correct public sentiment and prepare for electing a President of and for the United States.

The Impeachment of the President.

The following very sensible article is from the Albany Journal, the central radical organ of New York. We trust that its warnings and its cautions will be heeded in the quarter to which they are addressed. If they are not, the darkest and worst chapter to the history of the country is about to open. The Journal says:

If an impeachment were ordered, it would not merely be the trial of Andrew Johnson, but also the arraignment of a party which represents a very great minority, and exceedingly active minority (large majority, counting the South, in) of the American people. That party accepts the President as its leader and exponent. It sustains his policy with energy and determination. It defends upon what it calls Constitutional grounds, the very acts which are relied upon to justify the process of arraignment. It says that any attempt to withdraw this power from the executive would, in itself, be usurpation. We cannot doubt that if articles of impeachment were to be prepared, the Democracy would consider itself as having been placed at the bar—would repudiate the judgment as the fulfilment of one party against the other, and would stand ready to uphold the President in a refusal to submit, even though that refusal should result in civil war, as would be most likely in the excited state of the public mind certain to prevail.

Let us imagine the condition of affairs. A chief magistrate condemned by a court whose jurisdiction is denied at the outset by several millions of the American citizens. He refuses to obey process. The Senate declares him out of office; but he persists in the exercise of prerogative. Congress then, representing the Government, undertakes to oust him; but he responds to his aid, what military he can command, and prepares to test the question of force. Meanwhile, the violence and turbulence engendered at the National Capital extends through every section of the country not yet fully recovered from the delirium of war. Parties are developed in each town, city, and hamlet, holding exactly to the most pronounced opinions on one side or the other, and ready to fight for those opinions. A spark might at any moment drop into this magazine, and then—what then? We of the North yet hardly know what civil war means, as they have learned it who have seen—street divided against street, family against family, law obliterated, order destroyed, civil securities overthrown, and neighbors arrayed in mortal enmity against neighbors.

Security for the Future.

The Radicals justify much of their unconstitutional, harsh and unwise legislation with reference to the Southern States and people, on the ground that some security must be obtained for the future. They ask the question, what is to prevent or even deter the people of the late rebel States from again taking up arms, if they are allowed representation and all the rights and privileges of citizens of the "loyal" States? They tell the masses from the pulpit, from the rostrum, and through both secular and religious journals, that it is unwise and dangerous to put the ballot in the hands of men who have taken part in, or even given countenance to the "rebellion." They go farther, and demand that all the States constituting the late Southern Confederation shall be held as conquered provinces or territories—that the State governments formed in accordance with the demands of Congress and the requirements of the President, shall be abolished, and that the people of one section of the Union shall be held in serfdom by another. All these demands are made by the Radical party, and justified on the plea that the "loyal North has a right to demand security for the future from the rebellious and disloyal people of the South."

Now, the question to be considered is, have not the Southern States given such security as will make a reputation of the late rebellion or revolution an impossibility?

In this aspect, let us examine the facts as stated in the report of the Comptroller General of Georgia respecting the losses consequent upon the war in that State.

By the tax returns of 1866 the taxable property is estimated at $222,183,787, while in 1860 it was returned at $672,292,147, which reduced to currency, would be $1,008,438,663, making over seven hundred millions as the loss occasioned by the war in one State alone. Nor is this all. This estimate does not include the amount swallowed up in Confederate bonds and scrip, which the Comptroller believes would swell the total loss of the Empire State of the South above a thousand millions of dollars. So vast and sweeping an impoverishment of such a population is incredible. The returns of population as far as they have reached the office, indicate a decided loss. In twenty-seven counties, 86,009 white population is reported against 90,748 in 1860, showing a loss of 12,839, or nearly one-eighth.

Now, when it is remembered that the late war included little destruction of women and children, at least by the hands of the soldiery, and in this respect presented a marked contrast to most other wars, the drain on the male element of the State must have been enormous.

This is the security given by the State of Georgia alone for her good behavior and fealty to the Constitution in the future. Now, it must be remembered that all the States in revolt suffered to a greater or less extent. Some not so heavily as Georgia, others more so. The losses in Virginia were most disastrous. From the Potomac to the Rappahannock the country was laid waste, while the fertile and beautiful valley of the Shenandoah, seared and blackened by the hand of war, yielded no return to the labors of the husbandmen. Around Richmond, and from thence to the mouth of the James, the houses were destroyed and the land made barren.

South Carolina also felt the devastating effects of the war, and her people are suffering at this time from privations, penury and want. All over the South the losses have been such as to make a reconstruction of labor and business a necessity, and thus each State has united with Georgia in furnishing security that the revolt of 1861 will not be repeated.

Is not the security thus offered sufficient? Who believes that another civil war will ever be inaugurated in the South? The leading men of that section, those who precipitated the people into the struggle, have abandoned their old position. They adopted the arbitrament of the sword, and having failed, accept the settlement as final and conclusive. They will soon pass away, and their places be filled by other men holding other views upon the questions connected with the perpetuity of the Union. They will adopt a different policy under the change which war and its results have imposed upon the nation. The ravages of the war will, however, be transmitted to them, and they will be thus bound by the security given by their predecessors. With this class, rebellion and war will not be dreamed of as remedies for political evils, but the Union of the States and the welfare of the people of all parts of the nation will be the leading and controlling ideas, to the exclusion of all others.

In view of these facts, what excuse is there for the further agitation of the question of admitting the people of the South to their proper relations with the national government? The security that binds them at the present time is better than all the legislation that can be adopted. Further exclusion will but injure the material prospects of the Southern States, and that will affect the whole nation. Let the Union be reconstructed by wise, patriotic and just measures; let the people of the South be treated as friends and equals and the nation will soon recover from the civil war, through which it has passed, and the Federal compact will become stronger and more enduring with the flight of time.

The New Haven, (Conn.) Register of last week has the following item:—In this city, at the last April election, there was a very noisy Republican Radical who remarked among other impudencies that Democrats as a class, were not honest men, which was with him good reason for not voting with them. He afterwards removed to New York and is now in jail in that city, for swindling.

List of Premiums.

The following premiums were awarded at the Annual Fair of the Susquehanna County Agricultural Society, held in Montrose, October 10th and 11th, 1866.

DIVISION 1.—HORSES.
