If the motive was the concealment of his attentions to the daughter, then his object could not have been accomplished short of the murder of the whole family, which some think was comprised in his plan, and that the whiskey and candy given them contained poison, and that, failing of its purpose, the club cut after returning from the murder of Croswell was intended to finish the bloody job. Certainly the small amount of money realized from the sale of the cow, etc., (only some $30 or $40, which was in possession of the wife, as Lane is said to have known,) was by a man in Lane's position and circumstances; and it seems almost incredible that any sane man, of ordinary intelligence, could have expected to kill a whole family under such circumstances, or even the sing e member of the family which he did kill, and escape detection. as witnesses, and the following facts elici- Indeed, the whole history reads more like a romance than a reality, including alike at which we are enabled to contract for, but the post-William Lane, living on the South side the conduct of Roswell and his family of the river in the town of Nichols, at Hy- and the supposed murderer. — Owego Gaz-
