

happened to be Mr. ... executor. I also paid him my annual subscription to the society. He and his wife made a good lunch, pocketed my silver spoons and forks, and their coachman stole some things from the stable and the servant's hall. So you see, Mr. Temple, I am just now more than usually suspicious of gentlemanly persons.

A good natured laugh at the expense of Lord Claydon and myself ran round the table. It appeared on inquiry that Mr. Ambrose, who was dining with Lord Claydon, drove a pair of greys and a close carriage, as did also Mr. Singleton the rural dean, who was dining with Mr. Chilmark. The turnpike woman had mistaken one carriage for the other, and owing to the misdirection I had followed the wrong carriage. Hence my fix; but Lord Claydon became my firm friend, and rendered me important service.—Chambers' Journal.

Hay-Making.

There is annually so much good grass mercilessly mannaughtered in making it into hay, that it becomes the duty of every publisher, editor and agricultural writer in the land, happening to have a better practical knowledge of hay-making, to begin, with the hay season, preaching as earnestly as they can, at every opportunity, better principles, until a radical reform in much of our hay making practice shall be achieved.

As clover usually comes first in the routine of haying, and the season for putting mowers afield is close at hand, let us bear in mind that the best standing condition of clover is when the plant itself is fully developed, and the heads in full but early bloom, before any considerable portion of them have assumed the slightest tinge of brown. Then instead of being roasted, broiled and baked in the scorching sun until it is black as Japan tea, as is too frequently the case with clover hay, the best plan is to cut after the dew is off in the morning, spread or in the swath, as much as can be done in five or six hours of clear drying weather, then twenty-four hours more in small cocks, sheltering from the dew and rain, and hauling and put away with the leaves still green, wilted but not in the least crisped or blackened by the sun.

The grasses are best cut when the foliage and stalks have attained full growth and the seeds are entirely developed but still in a milky state. Like clover, they should be cooked after a few hours sun curing, finished off in the cock, cured but not in the least crisped, and baled in white still green in color, elastic and possessed of all the inviting aroma of "new mown hay."

If the foundations of bays and stacks are made well up clear of the ground, affording full and free ventilation underneath, and then is stowed away a layer of clean, dry straw, say six inches in depth, is placed every two feet between the courses of hay, there will be no danger of clover or any other kind of grass heating, moulding or rotting, though put away a great deal greener than is the general practice, and infinitely better hay will be the result.
