Educating Milkers.

Gentleness and quietness in milk stock results in a measure from education. Improper training makes bad manners in the stable, as well as in the house. A few weeke ago we saw a young and beautiful cow being driven to the sham-bles for slaughter. She was a cross beween the Ayrshire and Shorthorn, and had every appearance of being of large milking capacity. Indeed, had there been no defect in her udder, this animal could have been sold at a high price for the dai-

The history of this case, which we subsequently learned, is not an uncommon one, and will indicate the losses that are constantly occurring from neglect or improper education of animals for the dairy. In the case in question the animal when young had been turned into an isolated pasture with other young cattle, and with no attention in familiarizing her with persons she grey up timid and unusually wild. At three pears old she had her first calf, and the difficulty was in trying to tame so as to be easily milked. Impatience and harsh treatment on the part of the milker only increased the difficulty, and the animal became such a confirmed kicker, that resort was had to tying the feet, and in this way she was milked during that season.

The next season the milking of this cow was given to a very patient and kind person, who by various acts of feeding and petting, so won upon the affections of the animal, that after a little while not the least difficulty was had in milking. So long as this person was employed in performing the operation. For the past season circumstances required a change of milking of milking and the got out his bit of paper, and by the help of his little lamp, that Tony held so near his nose that it would have burned it, if it hadn't been a safety lamp, he read it again:

"The blood of Jesus Christ, his son, cleanseth from all sin."

"I don't just know," said Tony; but I've heard that same before somewhere, and I don't just know what it may be. I don't just know what it may be. I don't just know what it may be. To reach the highest success something more is necessary—the stock must have good keep and kind care. Take strong rope, long enough to double; then put on the tail the same as a crupper; now cross it over the back, and pass each end of the rope through the bit; then fasten to a post or any other firm substance. Now come up in front of the horse with any object that will cause him to go back. As he settles back on the rope the strain comes on the tail, and he will rush forward to get away from the hirt. Down deep in the bowels of the earth, Billy Graves was going along one of the passages of the mine to his place of work, when, by the light of the little lamp that was stuck to the front of his cap, he saw something white, and picked it up. It was a leaf from somebody's Testament that had fallen out.

Billy took his lamp from the front of his cap, and by its dim light tried to read : but he was a poor reader at best, and kept losing his place.
