Hill and Drill Corn.

Among the experiments tried during the year by Prof. Daniels, on the Experimental Farm of the University of Wisconsin, were some to test the comparative methods of hill and drill planting of corn, both for grain production and when designed for forage.

Corn planted in hills yielded 5.4 per ct. less than in drills. The general appearance of that in hills was much the best, however, the ears being larger and better filled at the tips.

That in hills had 10.9 per cent. of soft corn, that in drills 11.4 per cent.
